Brockmeyer has just returned from an extended trip throughout the Southwest, as far as Corpus Cristi, Tex., and brings with him valuable information bearing upon the live-steck industry and the prevailing high price of beef. From facts given by him, it would seem that the excessive cost of beef at present is not due so much to a so-called combine of whole-cale butchers or packers as to a great decrease in the supply of cattle, due to several causes.

The Governor outlines this as follows: First, a reaction resulting from over-production; second. a five years' continuous drought in the brood belt of Texas; third, the high price of corn and consequent decrease of the supply of corn-fed cattle, and, fourth, a prolonged winter, resulting in aix weeks' delay in the production of grass-fed cattle on the market, due to the late grass crop in the Indian Territory and Texas.

Through the courtesy of a gentleman well acquainted with the Spanish authorities, I was yesterday Spanish authorities, I was yesterday given a permit to speud an hour in the prisons of Cubanne and Moro Castle. I had been there before, but I was not permitted on the previous occasion to go as freely through those gloony corridors as I was allowed yesterday. The greatest diligence and care is exercised toward keeping any powspaper men from inside those newspaper men from inside those blood-stained walls. I was introduced as an architect from Germany, and, as there happened not to be a man there who could speak a word of German, I had no difficulty in making german, I had be districted in the mental observations of what was going on. It would be difficult to intelligently describe the frehitecture. The clay and brick have been drenched in blood. The cells are small and are devoid of flooring except heavy stone blocks, made necessary to prevent tunneling. There are no beds, the priconers lying on the cold stone and sleeping the best way they can. Thick and heavy walls divide the narrow cages. They dared not speak, but their countenances told of their indescribable misery and suffering. Those who enter the grim portals of these two prisons may as well leave all hope behind. A maxim of Spanish law is that every person accused is guilty unless proven innocent.

What fearful stories, what fiendish acts and atrocious crimes the stones of those prisons could tell if they could only talk. The commonest way of execution, and one or more of these happen almost every day, is to garrote the victim. Unsolved Problem.

Issociated Press leased wire Service.

NEW YORK, April 13.—The aspect of the planets, according to the French astromomers, was exactly the same yesterday as it was 1862 years ago on the original Good Friday when Christi was crucified. That was in the thirty-fourth year of the Christian era and from that day until now the planets had not again assumed that position in regard to the sun. Joseph T. Monell, assistant to Prof. Rees at the Columbia College Observatory, said that astronomers had not yet given an explanation satisfactory to the orthodox concerning the heavenly phenomena on the original Good Friday.

"From the sixth to the ninth hour," would mean, according to the Julian calledar, some time in the early part of the afternoon. "The explanation that there was a solar cellpse will not hold," said Prof. Monell, "for historians say that the moon was full, and then an eelipse of the sun is impossible. There might have been a lunar celipse in the early evening and local astronomers perhaps got a little mixed about the time."

Several dispatches came from San Fran-cisco yesterday inquiring if Heney had of his arrest or indictment.

It appears that Henry left San Fran-risco about two weeks ago and got as far as Butte, Mont., and then returned. There was a California detective and a United States Secret Service officer at his heels everywhere he went. At every turn he found one or the other at his side, and he concluded that it was useless to attempt to escape, so he returned to San Francisco, and will face the music. Hency is not a man to spend $10 where $1 will do, and his hring of so high-priced a lawyer and his hiring of so high-priced a lawyer as Foote may be taken as an indication also realizes the fact that he cannot throw away any chances. The fact that Heney was in San Francisco was a surprise to those who were congratulating themselves that their principal witness was out of the way. It is claimed here that Heney the way. It is claimed here that Heney will cast the blame on others, and that they canot put it onto him without in-criminating themselves.

President Cleveland came to down today with the main object of making a return of the personal (ncome in accordance with the law, Commissioner in accordance with the law. Commissioner of Internal Revenue Miller called on the President by agreement and assisted in filting out the personal income blank. It is understood that the President by cluded his full salary of $50,000 as Chief Executive, leaving it for accounting officers of the treasury to determine in future whether the payment of 2 per cent upon whether the payment of 2 per cent upon it is in violation of the constitutional provisions, which say the salary of the President shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office. The tax on an noome of $30,000 is $920.

As to the salary of United States judges, no official action has been taken, and it is probable that nothing will be done until the courts have decided the question. It is believed many judges have already mare returns. returns.

A petition asking for a rehearing of the income tax case will probably be made on Monday by Lawyer Guthrie. In view of the importance of the case the impression prevails that the court will grant the motion. Justice Jackson's health has improved considerably of late, and it is known that he recently expressed the determination to come to Washington and resume official duties at once in case the incometax suit was sot down for immediate hearing.

official duties at once in case the income-tax suit was act down for immediate hearing.

In view of this fact, it is believed that the case will be reopened and an early deci-sion be given upon those portions of the law upon which the Justices are now equally divided. This sudden forcing of the income tax suit to another early trial haw upon which the Justices are now equally divided. This sudden forcing of the income tax suit to another early trial is not agreeable to all parties to the last suit, and a very strong intimation was given here today that some of the counsel preferred waiting until next autumn, as the impression prevails that Justice Jackson is favorable to the income tax law.

Later information concerning Justice Jackson would indicate that he did not expect to return to Washington until October, which would delay a rehearing until then, and that is was coupled with the statement that if his ealth did not then permit him to resume his duties he would send his resignation to the President. There is no doubt as to the President's views upon the expediency and constitutionality of the income tax. His suggestion to Congress that a low-rate income tax should be enacted was only made after the most careful examination of all the questions involved, and, as a result of this examination, he was and is still, convinced that an income-tax law is constitutional. It is understood that his views differ radically from those of the court in the read-exemption question, as contained in their opinion of last Monday.

Mr. Cleveland, it is said, holds to the opinion that the taxation of incomes received from rents is not a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution and that in case of the retirement of Justice Jackson during his term of office he will see to it that his successor's views coincide with his own on this important point.

Continuing, he said: "Apparently nobody in Europe is courageous or relentless enough to attempt the double standard without England's consent. We can safely do this with England and all Europe opposing. It is not the legal tender quality which makes our silver dollars more valuable than the silver in them. In prosperous times we could safely use a large amount of silver always providing for its convertability into such money which does not get its value from the law. AN ULTIMATUM.

JAPAN EXPECTS CHINA TO SET-TLE FORTHWITH.

Made by the Mikado's Commissioners-Soldiers Dying with Cholera.

SHANGHAI, April 13.-(By Asiatic Cable.) The Mercury today reports that the Japanese have presented an ultimatum to Viceroy Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace Vicercy Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace commlessioner, demanding that China accept or refuse the terms offered by Japan no later than tomorrow. The paper adds that Japan reduced her claim for a money indemnity by 100,000,000 yea, and is also satisfied with the cession of Shing King Peninsula, on which Port Arthur stands, and will not demand additional territory. and will not demand additional territory. It is reported that the "peace party" is willing to accept these terms, but that the Hunan party is holding out. RUSSIA'S PART IN THE NEGOTIA-

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The Chinese Legation has received no confirmation of the advices from Japan that an understand-ing has been reached, and there is a strong disposition on the part of the Chinese to ing has been reached, and there is a strong disposition on the part of the Chinese to regard the report as premature. An ominous lull has occurred since the first brief, dispatch came from Japan that an understanding had been reached. Yet the concessions leading to the agreement have not been repeated, and it is stated that it will not be made known for a week or ten days. There is no doubt that China has appealed to Ruesia and other European nations against the terms which Japan originally proposed.

An interesting question arises as to whether the unmistakable threats of Russia and the appeal of that nation for intervention by the powers was antecedent or subsequent to the peace understanding reported yesterday between China and Japan. The view of the State Department officials is that the advices from Russia are really based upon the status of the peace negotiations several days ago and that since then the Japanese conditions have been materially modified and are now assuming such shape as to make them more agreeable to Russia or to other European powers.

As officially stated in the Associated more agreeable to Russia or to other Eu-ropean powers.

As officially stated in the Associated Press dispatches among the original Jap-aness demands was one for the absolute cession of Port Arthur. Although not officially stated, it is probable that this included a cession of a considerable tract of country in the vicinity of the port. As Port Arthur is within the dimits of

mand, if persisted in, would conflict directly with the Russian ultimatum delivered at the very beginning of hostilities, and repeated mere than once since in a semi-official manner, to wit: That she could not permit the acquisition by Japan of any portion of Manchuria.

Officials of the State Department are confident that within the last few days the Japanese demand on this point has been modified so as to permit only the temporary occupation of Port Arthur, perhaps only so fong as the war indemnity shall remain unpaid. To such a stipulation, it is said, no reasonable objection could be made, as it would be based upon the precedent set by Germany in imposing terms of peace upon France when she retained the great French fortress of Belfort until the infomnity was paid. The practical effect of this in that case was to cause the French to pay the war indemnity in a space of time far shorter than was allowed by the treaty in order to escape the humiliation of foreign occupancy of French territory. Of course, if Japan follows a similar course in respect to Port Arthur the Russion government will make sure that she has ample guarantee that the occupied port will be evacuated within a fixed period of time. It is also pointed out that Japan may justly make such a demand for the temporary possession of Port Arthur as the means of insuring herself against a retailatory war by China until the feeling of resentment may have worn away, for, by the occupancy of the strategic position, the means of insuring herself against a retailatory war by China until the feeling of resentment may have worn away, for, by the occupancy of the strategic position, the means of insuring herself against a retailatory war by China until the feeling of resentment of the terms already practically agreed upon, in the hope of securing better treatment from Japan, while the latter mation is under apprehension of Russian intervention.

At the Chinese Legation it was said that no news and been received regarding the

LI PLEADED HARD.

VICTORIA (B. C.,) April 13.—The steamer Sikh, fourteen days from Yokohama, arrived this morning. The Associated Press correspondinet, writing of affairs to March 31, says that the subject of Li Hung Chang's long tetegram to Peking on March 22 is now known. Before his departure form China, the Japanese had stimified in emphatic language that no proposal for an armistice could be considered at the conference, but notwichstanding their admonition, the envoy pleaded so surenestly for this boon that Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu finally consented to mame certain conditions upon which a temporary suspension of milliary movements might be granted. These conditions were that Taku ports should be immediately occupied by a Japanese force and control of the rall-way from Chan-Hat-Kwan and Then-Tsin surrendered. It is reported that Li displayed greater anxiety with regard to the truce than concerning the ultimate provisions for peace.

The response of the Chinese court to Japan's provision is not known, and there is no need that it should be, for the Emperor at Hiroshims suddenly took the direction of this part of the business into his own hands. He rummoned Count to Japan's provisions gendelly took the direction of this part of the business into his own hands. He rummoned his resolve to valuntarily concede the armistice without imposing conditions of any kind in order to show his consciousness of the annoyance and embarrasment suffered by the ambassador in consequence of the delay in negotiations. WANTED A "SHOT." Wilcox Attacked by a Maddened

Morphine Eater. Morphine Eater.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—Dr. W. O. Wilcox, the demonstrator of anatomy of the California Medical College, had a narrow escaped death on Friday from maddened morphine eater. Dr. Wilcox, returned from the college about 2 o'clock. In the patients' sitting-com stood a young man of about 22 years of age with that sallowness of complexion which betokens the excessive use of some leadily drug. His eyes glared fleroedy and the trembled with suppressed excitement. trembled with suppressed excitement.

He told me he desired to see me early, said Dr. Wilcox in speaking of affair. "I detected that he was a morne flend, and as I do not care to treat h patients, I told him that he would patients, I told him that he would to go elsewhere. I entered the contion room, and, despite my protest, he wed me. I threatened to remove him, supon he burst into tears and begged uid give him only one 'shot' of the I hesitated, and his manner became tening. In the next moment I was a presence of a madman. Associated Press Leased-wire Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—"The new woman is marching on to glory," exclaimed the Rev. William Rader in the Y.M.C.A. auditorium Friday.

"Well, let her march," answered the Rev. A. C. Hirst, "as long as she is tender-hearted enough to take us along with her."

Dr. C. O. Brown joined the discussion and then so many things were said of the new woman that she must have blushed from sheer modesty, if there were any of her present. It was at the fifth preliminary meeting to arrange for the Woman's Congress, which is to open on May 20.

Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper had announced that of the eighty people who had been invited to speak at the congress only six or seven had refused. Mrs. George T. Gaden told who the speakers would be, and said that one thousand of the women of the Pacific Coast had promised to come to San Francisco to hear them. The names she announced as speakers were: Miss Anna Stoval, Dr. Mary Wood Allen of Ann Arbor, Mrs. Kate Tupper Galpin, Miss Alice McComss, Mrs. Nellie Blessing Eyster, Mrs. Philip Weaver, Miss Sarah Seversance, Dr. Kellogg Lane, Miss Ray Frank, Dr. Florence Sakonstall, Dr. Amy G. Bowen, Dr. Bliza Corbett, Miss Helen Guthrie Miller, Miss May Keeler, Dr. Thrasher, Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson, Mrs. E. A. Ord, Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, Miss Helen Campbell, Mrs. Charles Nash, Mrs. George Gaden, President David Starr Jordan and George R. Dedonn, Miss Sasan B. Anthony will address the congress every day, as will also Miss Anna Howard Shaw.

JUSTICE FIELD.

Gov. Budd Does not Think that He Will Resign.

Associated Press Leasen wire Pareice.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—Local Dem orats do not look upon the retirement of Justice Stephen J. Field as likely to take place soon. That pressure is being brought to bear to induce him to retire, they my, may be true, but when it would be as a rumor he was about to yield to the demands of his enemies and carry out his first decision.

"Justice Field will not resign," was what Gov. Budd had to say about the matter. "Who would probably succeed him it he should withdraw from his position? Well, I tell you; I don't think he will withdraw, but if he should there is only one logical successor. That is William T. Wallace. I consider Judge Wallace the foremost Jurist of this country today," continued the Governor with warmth. "There is not another man who could so nobly fill the place as he."

Congressman James G. Maguire was quite certain that Justice Field had absolutely no intention of retiring. He, too, however, favors Judge Wallace as Field's successor in case of the latter's retirement and other Democratic politicians and lawyers take the same view.

A BIG LAND SUIT.

The Government Contests a Claim of uated in Multnomah and Clackamas coun-ties near this city, will come up in the United States Circuit Court next Tuesday. The case is known as the "overlap land case" and is brought by the United States government against the Southern Pacific Company.

The contention of the government is that the land having been given to the Northern Pacific in 1873 was not included in the grant to the Oregon and California, which has been absorbed by the Southern Pacific, and that the Northern Pacific's prior grant excluded the land from the grant to the Oregon and California. But the Northern Pacific failed to build from the Northern Pacific falled to build from Wallula to Portland and its grant along the Columbia River was forfeited to the government. And as the overlapping land was never included in the grant to the Oregon and California it cannot now be included. The land is very valuable.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—A man and a woman have been passing imitation is pieces here for over a week and, try as hard as he could, Secret Service Agent Harris found it impossible to run them to earth. The counterfeits were very poor, and instead of being molded were stamped out of a brass sheet with a die and then plated.

Dudley and Reland Harris, sons of Agent Harris, were put on the case. They sighted their man last evening on a bicycle and gave chase on foot, but were unable to overtake him. Then they jumped into a wagon, standing on the street and soon had the fleeling man in custody. He gave his name as John Baddeley, an engraver and printer. He had not teen locked up long when his wife went to look for him at a lodging-house where they had been living and she, too, was taken into custody. Baddeley insists that his arrest is a mistake, but the Secret Service agents say that they have a clear case against the couple.

TACOMA (Wash...) April 13.—The funeral of Paul Schulze will be held Sunday afternon at 2:30 o'clock from his late residence. Rev. A. W. Martin, pastir of the Free Church, will officiate. The pail-bearers will be seven business associates, including General Manager Kendrick and Carl Spuhn of Portland. Mrs. Schulze, his divorced wife, arrived today from Portland, where she has resided since her return from Germany, a year ago. She is the guest of her sister, Mrs. W. C. Ripley, and will attend the funeral.

It rose up from the crest of the left-hand peak and floated off northeast toward the Cascade Mountains. Part of the 'time it rose in a stady, dark stream much resembling the column of smoke rising from a huge chimney. At other times it had more of the appearance of steam, being of a lighter color.

The atmosphere was unusually clear yeaterday, giving a much better view of the phenomenon than could be had last November.

HOTEL REDONDO.

Special Rates During Fiesta Season: $2.50 to $3.50 PER DAY.

Redondo Beach is only 40 minutes from Los Angeles, and trains run almost every hour of the day; besides which there will be a SPECIAL TRAIN on Wednessnesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings for the benefit of guests who wish to come into the city at night. By these trains they can leave Hedondo at 6:10 p.m. and return at 11 p.m.; thus having plenty of time to see all that goes on in the theaters or elsewhere in the evening.

The Hotel Redondo is first-class in every respect—one of the finest on the Pacific Coast, and its bathing, fishing, boating and other attractions are unexcelled. Residents of Los Angeles could not pay their guests a more graceful compliment than by sending them to it for a few days.

Rooms may be secured in advance and all arrangements made by applying at room 428 Bradbury Block, this city, or to

FOR SALE — AT POMONA—

"I SELL THE EARTH."

Talk about the "queer." If there are not queer things happening in the real estate business, they do not happen anywhere; for instance, the festive B.E. man gets a bargain; property that for some good reason must be sold; he advertises it as a bargain; people eread the ad and comment, but don't buy; then suddenly some man with a little more nerve than his follow-men picks it up; then all rush for it and want it bad; I have seen that little art performed twice in the past week; but too late, friends; you will have to try again; now those two 30-acre pieces, I have advertised for the past month—50 acres planted to fruit for $150 per acre; and the other, 30 scress to barley for $55 per acre; money or marbles, they will go this week. R. S. BASSETT.

These colonies are the home of the almond, the highest priced nut in the market; equally choice for the prune, that is the poor man's table fruit. The first premium on prunes at the World's Fair was taken by fruit growers here. The olive, peach, alppie, apricot and fig are seen here in their perfection. WHY?

Our advantages in a nuishell—2500 feet (i.g. mile) above sea level; 1000 feet higher than any other fruit-raising location; 2000 feet higher than 90 per cent of them timbered mountains to wisdward; absolute freedom from fog and dew; perfect fortification against insect pesis; 1300 acres of orcharding; the handsomest trees in the State; first prize for fruit at Chicago World's Fair; sales of orchards only to the best people; planting every acre sold; the healthiest point in California.

This year's experience, when Santa Clara Valley is frost-bitten, is no frost injury with us.

POR SALE—"WELCOME TO ALL!" THIS is the motto that greets our eye at every glance as we look over our beautiful little city arrayed in the gayest attire of La Fiesta colored bunting flags, shields, paims, vines and evergreens. Yes, we say "Welcome," and let the echo ring out o'er mountains, land and sea, and let a thousand receboes reach all who may want to come within our gates, whether it be to see and enjoy our glad Jubilee, to patronize our thriving business enterprises, or to enjoy the genial hoppitality of our beautiful homes in this beautiful, growing city in this, the most delightful climate under the shind sun. We want our described to the shind sun. We want our described to the shind sun. we are selling mantels so cheap that our competitors have become suspicious of us and, while they don't say that we steal our mantels, they do say we could not afford to sell them so cheap if we paid for them. That is getting too close to our family secret to be comfortable, and we can't stand it any longer. We had hoped they wouldn't force us to tell just how and where we get our mantels. It's ticklish business sometimes. longer. We had hoped they wouldn't force us to tell just how and where we get our mantels. It's ticklish business sometimes. But we were not really to blame for it all at the start. We were born when very young and at the time of our birth we inherited a lot of land, and as soon as we were strong enough we planted acorns on our land, and they in turn grew into oaks. Close by these oaks we built a factory and out of our lumber we made mantels. They didn't cost us anything—they were forced upon us, and now we are trying to get rid of them. That is why we can sell you that elegant white pine mantel for $32; a solid oak one for $35; one our competitors would ask you $45 for we will sell for $30; also a $50 one for $35; and one they ask $65 for and tell you it's less than to struggle against such odds. Some of them have given up and are going to quit, others will follow. In their dying efforts they have said many hard things about us, but we forgive them all—they know not what else to do. After they have passed from the field and have been quietly laid on the shelf, we will not forget them. We will often stop and think how foolish of them to quit as soon. During flesta week we hope you will attend strictly to "getting gay" and keep so. If you happen to go past Joseph's, the furniture king, $26-428 S. Spring st. ask him what he saved on those 2 elegant mantels he displays in his windows. He bought them of us to put into his beautiful residence now being erected on Potter at. Our competiors tried to make him believe we would "do him up," but ask him what he saved on those 2 elegant mantels he displays in his windows. He bought were mantels he displays in his windows. He bought sign on nearly every new house in the city Jump onto a Downey-ave, cable car and just wink at the conductor. Houses.

TO LET—ANY SIZE HOUSE YOU WANT, AT any rent you would like to pay, but—let us make this suggestion to you—why don't you stop paying rent altogether? Have you a little money—just a little? If so, come to see us and we will arrange to sell you a choice lot and have a house built upon it exactly to suit, and then let you pay for it by installments. If you do not want to build for a year or two, come and hear what choice lots we can sell for the letast money and easiest terms, and when you get ready to build you will own it, and scarcely believe it could have been done so easily. The result of this test was that many of the piles had to be renewed within five years; but in order to make a thorough test of the virtue of this treatment. I charged a number of these piles with all the oil that could be forced into the pores of the wood when thoroughly seasoned, and succeeded in charging them with from twenty-five to thirty pounds to the cubic foot. I have recently taken several of these piles out of the structure, and, after nearly twenty years' exposure, find them to be still thoroughly charged with oil, and as free from decay and the attack of marine pests as, when placed in the bridge, and the wood, which is known in this locality as lobiolity pine, or a bastard yellow pine, is stronger than when in its green and natural state. This test has been the most thorough and longest of any made in the United States. We are now negotiating to treat piling for two new bridges across Galveston Bay, aggregating 200,000 running feet, using twenty-five pounds of oil to the cubic foot, at a cost of 45 cents per running foot of piling, averaging twelve liches in diameter, and running from twenty to thirty-five feet in length.

COMMERCIAL.

or rather the buying out of the latter nrm by the big corporation—which was very actively denied at the time by the Fullers. already had the effect of largely in creasing the price of coal oil to consumers on this Coast. Consumers are now paying on this Coast. Consumers are now paying it cents per can more for their off than they were before the combination was made. This, in some cases, amounts to a considerable sum during the year for a family, although, cf course, it is infinitesimal compared with the enormous amount of profit which the Standard Oil Company will reap from their little move. There goems to be no prospect of curbing the aspirations of this glant corporation within any reasonable space of time. Its power grows enormously from year to year, and it will take something like a general uprieing of the people to check it.

Meantime, there is no apparent prospect that the local oil fields will be able to offer any relief from this oil monopoly. The trouble is that the California oil, or a much of it as beay yet been discovered, is of an entirely different character from the basis being asphaltum instead of kerosene, so that while it is a first-class oil for fuel or lubricating purposes, or for the manufacture of paints, inks, etc., it does not contain sufficient illuminating properties to make it oay to refine for that is cents per can more for their off than fuel or lubricating purposes, or for the manufacture of paints, inks, etc., it does not contain sufficient illuminating properties to make it pay to refine for that purpose. The California oil that comes nearest to an illuminating oil, as far as discoveries have yet been made, is an oil which is found in the coast range of Fresno county, in which some Los Angeles parties are interested.

Not only is it true that there is no apparent relief for consumera of coal oil in this country, but even from the outside it is not so easy to work up competition, as the Standard Oil Company succeeded in having Mr. Wilson increase the duty on oil in his bill. Apart from this, it is understood that the Standard people have an agreement with the Rothschilds, which obligates each party not to infringe on the territory of the other. There is, however, an extensive oil field in Peru, from which crude oil is shipped to San Francisco in a tank steamer every month. If this oil is good for illuminating purposes, and if the Standard Company should continue to force prices up in this country, it might be practicable to import some of the South American product, which could be laid down in this section very cheaply by tank steamers.

the south American product, which could be laid down in this section very cheaply by tank steamers.

Like potatoes, onions are a crop that should pay the farmer well in this section, if raised of good quality and brought into the market at the right time. There are great fluctuations in the price of onions in this market, even within a few weeks. There is seldom a year during which the price of onions does not at some time go up to the nelghborhood of $2 a sack, at which figure there is big money in raising them. Just at present local onions are quoted at $1.75, at which price they are scarce, so that they have to be imported. As the population of such articles will be larger and it is likely that prices will not jump up and down so rapidly from day to day.

One of the most pertinent remarks made by Senator Elkins in his short address at One of the most pertinent remarks made by Senator Elkins in his short address at the Chamber of Commerce was that in which he cailed attention to the favorable location of Los Angeles as a supply point for Mexico, where there are tens of millions of people who are today consumers of our goods to a considerable extent and who are each day becoming more educated to want and use them. At present the Mexicans are getting almost all the American goods they use from such interior points as St. Louis and Chicago, which are over a thousand miles distant from the nearest point of Mexico, while Los Angeles is within 150 miles of the Mexican line. With cheap fuel and the establishment of lines of steamships from San Pedro to points on the Pacific coast of Mexico this city should certainly become an important supply point, not only for the Mexican situation of the means of the means of the comment of the decidence of the means Mexico this city should certainly become an important supply point, not only for the Mexican cities on the coast, but also for a large section in the interior, as soon as railroads are built from the Coast. It would take some time to work up this trade, but there is no reason why our merchants should delay in laying the foundation for it. Some years ago the city of St. Louis started in to capture a large portion of the M-xican trade and has met with a considerable amount of success. A club was formed among the merchants for that purpose, a commercial paper printed that purpose, a commercial paper printed in two languages was established and excursions were arranged to Mexico, ber

cursions were arranged to Mexico, beside which every encouragement was given to the teaching of Spanish in St. Louis.

It would be a good idea for the merchants of Los Angeles to see what they can do in this direction. A good beginning might be made by an effective display of Southern California products at the exposition which is shortly to be held in the City of Mexico, although it must be admitted that the character of some of the people who are connected with the proposed American display at that fair is not such as to encourage the belief that it will be conducted in such a manner as to let the solid features of the display overbalance the Midway Plaisance business. Another good thing would be to encourage the study of Spanish by the young people of this city, as a knowledge of that language is absolutely necessary courage the study of Spanish by the young people of this city, as a knowledge of that language is absolutely necessary in order to do a successful business with the Mexicans, who, as a rule, are not over-ready at acquiring foreign languages. In fact, to do a successful business in Mexico it is necessary to study the business habits of that country, which seem peculiar to us. The Mexicans like to take their time about making a trade, and will not be hurried. Then, when they have made it they are accustomed to long credit. It is useless for Americans to try to chance the Mexican customs in this respect, all at once. If a man wants to sell goods he must supply the purchaser with such a quality and in such a manner as the purchaser desires. This is one reason why the French and Germans, and even the English, have hitherto been so much more successful than the Americans in doing business with Mexico. They have studied the peculiarities of the country and have adapted themselves thereto.

all fibers to which our conditions of soil, climate and labor are suitable (and that means practically all the following.) we give a list of imports of these goods for 1892 and 1894. Last year we imported flax, hemp, istle, jute, manila, sisal and other similar textile fibers to the amount of 164, 864 tons, at a cost of $11,152,103; while in 1893 the imports reached 227,523 tons, which cost $19,804,440.

"Nearly all these fibers, if not all of them, could be produced in California and several other States, including Florida, and it is only by thus utilizing our lands for a greater variety of crops that we can hope for best results in agriculture and horticulture, not alone in California but in many other States also. Possibly the greatest bar to the production of various fiber plants in this country is the lack of proper machinery for separating the fiber from the waste parts of the plant. But doubtless such machinery would soon become available if a need for it were shown in a disposition of tillers to go out of the old ruts a bit and tackle some of the new and promising industries that have so long lain dormant immediately about them."

An important real estate deal has been closed, whereby Lieut.-Col. A. S. Kimball, U.S.A., acquires 300 unsold lots in the Angeleno Heights tract, for a consideration of about $45,000. The property has been placed in the hands of Charles S Gilbert, who will offer them for sale at low prices and on reasonable terms.

CHICAGO, April 13.—The disturbing element which set the wheat market in a ferment on Thursday was worked over again this morning and was the principal element in creating the early fluctuations. It was discovered that after having partly unloaded the 400,000 bushels of wheat which it was said was to be put back into store instead of being sent to Buffalo on the original charter, the owners of the grain had ordered the unloaded portion of the cargoes back into the vessels again and the vessels to, proceed with it to its original destination. That gave the bears another opportunity to work a scare on the other party, and they immediately started a rumor that the wheat was being reloaded because it would not, on reinspection, grade No. 2. Upon inquiry of the agents who made the charter they confirmed the reloading of the wheat, but said the wheat was in the best of order. The opening price for May wheat was 54%, at which price the buying orders exceeded the selling. The price worked gradually upward to 55%, and, after reacting once to 54%, it alternated during the greater part of the nession between 55 bid and 55% sellers. The movement of the crop was in favor of the buils. Corn was weak. May opened at 45%, soid to 45% and closed at 45%. For oats the market started steady. at 1.51%. Although there is great interest in the upward tendency of oil here, there is little excitement, for the reason that nobody has certificates on which to trade. The new Producers' Association, a competitor of the Standard in refining interests, is having a rather hard row to hoe at present. They are obliged to buy crude oil at high prices and sell the refined product at low prices.

Of throned law. Lift up thine eyes, and greet
A giad light shining in the pulsing skies!
Take up the harp, atune its chords and sing
The giaddest song of all the melodies

ST. HUBERT OR SAUNDERS.

An Apparently Strange Case of Mis-taken Identity.

In yesterday's Times there was printed an Associated Press dispatch from Mountain View about the de-parture of one Capt. J. Ch. de St. Hubert from San Francisco and the ar-rest of a man named Saunders for something or other not explained in the dispatch, with the statement of a man that St. Hubert and Saunders were one and the same man.

were one and the same man. Yesterday afternoon a man came into the Times editorial room and presented a card bearing the inscription "Capt. J. Ch. de St. Hubert, California Wine-growers' Union, No. 249, Sutter street." He also presented a copy of the paper containing the dispatch alluded to and wanted to know the meaning thereof. He said he was in Mountain, View at the time referred Mountain View at the time referred to, drove to Heney's vineyard and back, but never knew anybody named Saunders and had no trouble with could offer any solution. It seems to be a case of mistaken identity. As soon as Mr. St. Hubert saw the dispatch alluded to he wired to his wife in San Francisco and some ex-planation may be forthcoming today. In the meantime Mr. St. Hubert will remain in Los Angeles fransacting business of the Wine-growers' Union.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—President Cleveland, it is reliably stated, has made out his income-tax return, with his own hand and his usual precision. He is said to be in a quandary as to whether he should file it in Washington. The chances are reported to be largely in favor of Washington.

Big Fields, Fast Time and Close Fin ishes at Agricultural Park Track.

Korven, Rummel, Blizzard and Com mission the Winners of the Various Events—The Talent Surprised.

The fiests race-meeting opened at the Agricultural Park track yesterday afternoon under the most favorable auspices, the weather being perfect, the track moderately fast, and the racing tip-top. Only one thing was lacking to insure the success of the day's sport, and, unfortunately for the management, that was the most material feature—the crowd.

There were, of course, a number of the old-timers and a sprinkling of the local 400, at the track-side, but the crush and jam which have characterised the Saturdays of race weeks in the past, was conspicuously absent yesterday, and the fact cocasioned comment.

That Loc Angeles is the banner trotting-horse city on the Coast is generally conceded, but it has always been supposed this was due simply to the fact that local race-goers have not had a chance to show their preferences, most of the meetings has been well advertised, for some time past. Nor can the weather be held responsible, for while it was cloudy during the morning, it brightened up hours before the racing commenced, and the sun shone undimmed for the remainder of the day.

Whatever the cause may be, the sport provided certainly deserved better recognition, for never has it been excelled in this city, and seldom has it been excelled in this city, and seldom has it been excelled. Big fields, fast time and close finishes were the order of the day, and as these three elements constitute first-class sport the world over, no more need be said upon the subject.

The first day's programme contained four events, two of which were The flesta race-meeting opened at the Agricultural Park track yesterday after-world over, no more need be said upon the subject.

The first day's programme contained four events, two of which were won by favorites, one by a second choice and one by a rank outsider, so that from a betting standpoint there was little to demur at. While the defeat of Whitestone by the despised Blizzard in the Newton handtcap was a crushing blow to the talent, it only served to make the betting livelier in the next race, as the shortenders were encouraged by the fall of the Lavorite and the knowing ones were anxious to recoup their losses.

While there was a fair sprinkling of ladies in the grand-stand, and in the few carriages which lined the fence on the infield, they were not nearly so numerous as the character of the sport would lead one to expect.

T. H. Williams, the sental president of one to expect.

T. H. Williams, the genial president of the California Jockey Club; Capt. J. C.
Newton and Capt. A. W. Barrett officiated raced for some six weeks or more, and overlooked Morven, who got off well, and won in hollow style in the very respectable time of 1:02%.

The flag fell to a beautiful start, all ten being bunched and in motion. Rafael essayed to make the pace, but was soon displaced by Morven. At the half Morven was a good open length in the lead, the favorite, Hal Fisher and Taibot Clifton leading the rest in the order named. They commenced to string out on the turn, and at the head of the stretch Coombs commenced to string out on the turn, and at the head of the stretch Coombs commenced to urge Pat Murphy. The favorite responded nobly, but after a vain effort to crawl up on Morven, quit, and gave way to Taibot Clifton. The latter, however, aithough driven for all he was worth, was completely outclassed by Morven, who won handily, with lots to spare, by two open lengths. The winner was bought in for $150.

Undismayed by their first defeat, the talent plunged on Rummel in the second race, the Los Angeles Futurity, at half a mile, and that their judgment was well founded was evidenced by the result, although the race was only won by the narrowest of margins, after a red-hot finish. Eight youngsters faced the flag for this event. But very little time, comparatively, was wasted at the post, the lot being dispatched in a bunch at their fourth break-away. Tiny showed in front for a short distance, but was passed by Lorens, who soon opened up a gap of a length between herself and the field. The pace was too hot to last, however, and at the bend, Viva, the favorite, and the Linda Vista filly began to close up on her. At the head of the stretch she was still in front, but Rummel, under the bat, was coming like the wind on the outside. A desperate struggle ensued, as he challenged the game filly, but in the last few strides thorem aftered and the flag for the flag for the game filly, but in the last few strides the game filly.

the game filly, but in the last few strides Lorena faltered, and the favorite snatched the race from her by a short neck. The Linda Vista filly finished a good third, with Yiva close up, Tiny, Prince Hooker, Tonino and Reina de Luna finishing in the order named. Time 0:50 flat.

The Newton handicap, at one mile, the star event of the day's programme, proved to be a surprise party to the knowing ones, for Whitestone, who was considered invincible, went down before Blizzard, an 8 to 1 shot, like grass before the mower. The announcement that Felix Carr, the favorite jockey, was to ride the Spreckels entry, Candid, caused a big lump of money to be wagered on that animal at short odds. After Carr had weighed out, however, it appeared that, in the belief that the crack jockey would not arrive in time, Mulkey had engaged Coombs to ride Candid, and after once completing his arrangements declined to alter them. Carr was very indignant, claiming that he had been sent down by Mr. Spreckels to ride, and threatening to return to San Francisco on the next train. Upon hearing that Carr was not to ride, the bookies cancelled their books and reopened again at slightly better prices, but there was a marked difference in the amount of money wagered upon Candid.

Starter Brown excelled himself in sending prices, but there was a marked difference in the amount of money wagered upon Candid.

Starter Browr excelled himself in sending the horses off for this event, the septette getting away at the second attempt on exceptionally even terms. Centinetia showed in front at the first turn, with Livtle Cripple at her quarter and the rest bunched at their heels. As they turned into the backstretch Centinella opened up a gap of a full length between herself and the rost, who were moving as one horse. At the half Centinella was still in the lead, and there appeared to be no signs of any diminution of the pace. Whitestone began to move up on the upper turn, but still it seemed to be Centinella's race, for the mare was going strong. At the head of the stretch, however, Whitestone closed upon her, and she shut up like a jack-knife. Under the whip Blizzard and Candid came with a rush, and soon overhauled the favarite, who struggled desperately to maintain his advantage. Peters fairly lifted his mount in the last few strides, and Blizzard just managed to snatch the race from the favorite by the shortest of necks, after as pretty a finish as the most captious could wish for. Candid was a fairly good third, the rest finishing as follows: Little Cripple, Capt. Coster, Centinella and Red Head. Time I:41½.

The last event on the card was a selling race for three-year-olds and upward, at six and one-half furlongs, for a purse of 3400, and as the first and second thoices finished in that order, the talent had a chance to recover, to come extent at jeast, from the blow dealt them by Whitestone.

declined to face even so pleasant a gon-tieman as Starter Brown, there was a delay-of over twenty minutes at the post-Finally, however, the eight horses receives the word to a very fair start, Hymn and Pescador shot to the front, but son afterward Bernardo and Commission were let out a peg or two. The pace soon told on Pescador, who was worn out almost before the start, and at the head of the stretch he was challenged by and sur-rendered the lead to the favorite. Bernardo made a game struggle to get up to him, but a driving finish resulted in victory for Commission by half a length, Hymn dnishing third, a length behind the pair. Pescador was fourth. BURGL'ARS' BOOT=Y.

A "FENCE" LOCATED IN A TA-MALE STAND.

John Thompson Arrested for Receiv ing Stolen Goods-An Important Arrest Made by Detectives Auble and Hawley.

As the result of some very clever work on the part of Detectives Auble and Hawley. John Thompson is in the City Jail, charged with being a "fence" for burglars. The evidence against him is so conclusive that there can be no doubt of his getting a long term in State's prison. This will be no novelty for Thompson, for he has already served two terms in this State-so the detectives say—one at San Quentin and the other at Folsom. It is also alleged that he did time at Sing Sing before he came to California.

other at Folsom. It is also alleged that he did time at Sing Sing before he came to California.

The capture of Thompson is a most important one, as it shows the channel through which a large part of the loot of the numerous burglaries committed in Southern Callfornia the past six month has disappeared.

For a long time the detectives have been puzzled in the effort to find out what became of the great amount of stolen goods reported to them, especially jewelry. The closest scruting has been kept on pawnshops, and jewely stores, but very rarely has any of the stolen property been recovered at any of these.

Perhaps the last place the average detective would look for burglars' booty would be in a tamale cart, yet it was there that Auble and Hawley located the "fence." For nearly six months Thompson had been crying "Hot tamales" on one of the principal thoroughares of the city, but at last the detectives dropped on to the fact that the lambe business was and assiptious characters were noticed to congregate about Thompson's tamale stand. This caused him to be shadowed and tracked to his room.

A few days ago the officers burst in his door and surprised him in his bed. A search Thompson's tamale stand. This caused him to be shadowed and tracked to his room.

A few days ago the officers burst in his door and surprised him in his bed. A search revealed a great amount of jewelry that had been reported to them as stolen. They also learned that he had mailed a package to the San Francisco mint. This was telegraphed for and found to contain a lot of broken-up gold jewelry from which the settings had been removed.

LOS ANGELES, April 12, 1895.—(To the Editor of The Times:) In a dispatch in this morning's Times from Philadelphia it is stated that the Masonic order has declared that cremation is not Christian burial.

clared that cremation is not Christian burtal.

A reader of The Times would rise up (on end) to ask by what act of inspiration a high priest of an unchristian organization should decree, and compel its observance, that cremation is unchristian.

By parity of reasoning it might be said that any punishment for criminal offenses except the whipping-post and crucifixion was unchristian.

A disposition of the dead sanctioned by the Almighty among his chosen people and considered the greatest honor that could be bestowed upon the dead by that people cannot idly be set aside and declared unchristian by any organization or individual simply because the custom of today is different from that of a few hundred years ago.

PROGRESS. PROGRESS.

People who get the greatest degree of comfort and real enjoyment out of life, are those who make the most out of their opportunities. Quick perception and good judgment, lead such promptly to adopt and make use of those refined and improved products of modern inventive genius which best serve the needs of their physical being. Accordingly, the most intelligent and progressive people are found to employ the most refined and perfect laxative to regulate and tone up the stomach, liver, and bowels, when in need of such an agent—hence the great popularity of Dr. Pierce's Pieasant Pellets. These are made from the purest, most refined and concentrated vegetable extracts, and from forty-two to forty-four are contained in each vial, which is sold at the same price as the cheaper made and more ordinary pills found in the market. In curative virtues, there is no comparison to be made between them and the ordinary pills, as any one may easily learn by sending for a free sample, (four to seven doses) of the Pellets, which will be sent on receipt of name and address on a postal card.

ONCE USED THEY ARE ALWAYS IN FAYOR.

ONCE USED THEY ARE ALWAYS IN FAVOR.

The Pellets cure billiousness, sick and bilious headache, dixiniess, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heart-burn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. Put up in glass vials, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is a laxative, two are mildly cathartic. As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve distress from over-eating, they are unequaled. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules; any child will readily take them.

Accept no substitute that may be recommended to be "just as good." It may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one whe needs help. Address for free sample, World's Dispensary Medical. Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

bed had been finally disposed of. This appears not to be the case. H. H. Metcalf, has addressed a proposition to the City Council in which he says:

"You having reconsidered your action in approving a contract with the city and myself in which I agreed to pay to the city of Los Angeles the sum of 8 cents per cubic yard for all sand and gravel by me removed from the bed of the Los Angeles River within the city limits, upon the condition that I be given the exclusive right to such sand and gravel for a period of ten years, and you then having referred the question as well as my proposition to the Board of Public Works several weeks ago and they having failed to take any action or make any report whatever in regard to the matter, I now wish to again offer to enter into the contract just as it was fermely approved by the Council, or in case the city would rather receive a cash offer for the sole privilege, I will then give to the city of Los Angeles for the exclusive privilege of removing sand and gravel from the official bed of the Los Angeles River within the city limits the sum of $10,000 per year, payable either monthly or semi-annually as you deem best; provided, however, that I am given the sole privilege for the term of ten years and the city will guarantee that I shall have the exclusive privilege for the same and will pass such necessary of the same and will take all other steps necessary to prevent any other person than myself from removing sand and gravel from such river bed."

that they must shut down work at least during fiesta week. In reply he was informed that the refinery would not be operated during that period and that meantime new apparatus would be put in which it was believed would do away with the bad odor.

The operation of the refinery was stoppd yesterday. People will have a good opportunty to observe whether the odor is noticeable during the evening as heretofore. If it be not noticeable then the smell which has caused so much complaint has, without doubt, been coming from the refinery.

this defense, and the facts set up in his defense, for the purposes of the demurrer being confessed. The demurrer will be overruied."

Attorney Alien intimated, in response to an inquiry of the court, that if the absolute truth of the article complained of was to be inquired into, then the trial of the asse would possibly take two weeks, as it, he supposed, would be preliminary to the institution of a civil suit. "I would like to ask opposing counsel, however," and Mr. Alien, "as an officer of the court, whether he expects really to prove corruption, as alleged?"

"You know what is alleged in the complaint," suggested the court.

"I would rather have the word of a man of honor than any amount of legal verbiage," answered counsel.

"We believe, in a legal sense, that there has been corruption," responded Mr. Kendrick, and the words provoked a storm of comment from opposing counsel, with their attendant henchmen. The court called the attorneys to order, and after some discussion had taken place as to when the trial of the case could be proceeded with, the case was set for Monday, the 22d inst.

THE WISE DIVORCE CASE. to sustain him in the position he took with regard to the scope of the duties of the District Attorney.

He was followed by Attorney Coodrick, who, on behalf of the defendant, proceeded, first to prove by very commonplace illustration the absurdity of the contention that the District Attorney is not endowed with discretionary powers, and as a corollary, must be at the beck and call of every irresponsible personage who desires to gratify a morbid vanity or a petty spite by setting in motion the machinery of the law. Counsel quoted authorities to sustain the position he took and argued that the District Attorney stands indifferent as between the people and the defendant; just as much interested in guarding the trust confided to him by the people as in seeing that an innocent person is not subjected to the trouble and irritation of a prosecution.

Mr. Goodrich proceeded to show that cution.

Mr. Goodrich proceeded to show that even such a body of men as the Board of Pilot Commissioners is endowed, with quasi-judicial powers, and a large class of officers cutside the courts are called upon to exercise discretionary powers amounting in some particulars, very closely to those exercised by the courts themselves.

THE WISE DIVORCE CASE.

The vast amount of gossipy and semiscandalous testimony adduced in the Wise divorce suit came to an end yesterday in Department Six, and the case was submitted without argument.

The testimony introduced by the defense early in the day went to show that Mr.
Wise had been a hard-working and indulgent husband, but that his wife was careless, an unthrifty housewife, and one who was apparently discontented with her home.
The deafendant, Frank H. Wise, told the story of his marital troubles with deliberateness, and only once overstepped moderate bounds when he stated that on one occasion he had told his wife that rather than suffer the disgrace of separation he would take a pistol and blow his brains out. He denied every accusation made against him by his wife, and created a good impression by his modest demeanor.
Mrs. Wise and her friends seemed to enjoy listening to his testimony hugely, for smiles wreathed their faces most of the time, and not infrequently handkerchiefs were called into requisition to smother the convulsive laughter provoked by Wise's recutal of the infelicity of his home life.
Some testimony having been offered in rebuttal, Judge McKinley instimated that he would not listen to argument, but if the attorneys so chose they might submit the case on briefs. Counsel for the defense volunteered to submit the case without any argument, and this being acquiesced to by opposing counsel, the case was taken under advisement.

PRETTY LERN TYLLER'S TROUBLES.

J. M. Snodgrass, the young man of wellclosely to those exercised by the couris themselves.
Attorney R. H. Chapman followed with a short argument and then Attorney M. T. Allen closed for the plaintiff.
Judge Van Dyke in over-ruling the demurrer to the answer very lucidly outlined the status of the case stripped of the technical verbosities of counsel. "For the purposes of the demurrer," said he, "these facts of course are sidmitted. And the only question is whether there would be any justification for the refusal on the part of the District Attorney to institute proceedings. Counsel, in support of the demurrer to that part of their answer, took the position that the District Attorney has no discretion; that his duty is simply ministerial; in other words, automatic—as an atomaton, and when certain things are represented to him he is obliged to act. And if a prima facie case is made, although he may have reason to believe that upon further inquiry it would to marry her as soon as he was able. By this means he obtained the girl's affections and confidence, and while on a trip to this city he took her to the Oakhand House, on First and San Pedro streets, and there worked her rush. The illicit intimacy thus began in August, 1894, and continued until December, when young Snodgrass repudiated his promise of marriage, and Miss Tyler, finding herself in such a coa-dition as would prevent her from earning a

THE FIRST CARLOAD.

Dispute Over Who Shipped the First Oranges.

Oranges.

The question as to who was the first shipper from California of a carload of oranges East has raised a small discussion. In yesterday's Times there was published a letter from J. de Barth Shorb, the well-known orange-grower and vineyardist, of San Gabriel, in which he states that he made the first carload shipment in 1877, followed by his entire crop, and that the shipments of that year were followed by others in succeeding years.

ahlpments of that year were followed by others in succeeding years.

It now appears that J. W. Wolfakill of this city lays claim also to the distinction of being the first shipper. He states in a published letter that he made a carload ahipment of oranges to St. Louis in 1877. From this it appears that both gentlemen shipped their first carload East the same year, 1877, which facts determined, makes honors easy between them.

CLERKS' HOLIDAYS.

The Queen of La Fiesta Interceding

The Queen of La Fiesta Interceding for Them.

The Queen of La Fiesta yesterday received a petition signed by the clerks of the city, in which they besechingly prayed Her Majesty to exercise her influence in their behalf, to the effect that they be granted two half-holidays, so that they, in common with others of her dutiful subjects, might have an opportunity of witnessing the parades and the various other festivities to be held during flests week. The Queen was pleased to grandously refused to the form of the prompt of the sociation of Los Angeles, and accompanied the document with the request that the members of the association would see fit to grant the request of the petitioners, to the end that none of her loyal subjects shall be forced to labor during the hours of her triumphal entry into this fair-city of Los Angeles.

The belief is popularly expressed that the prayer of the petitioners will be granted.

Associated Press Leased-wire Service.

QUINCY (Ill.,) April 13.—Judge Epler of the Adams County Court has practically disfranchised nearly all of the 1100 men at the Soldiers' Home. The Robbins-Roth election contest was on trial and the legality of the ballots of soldiers at the home was being investigated. A veturan named John Oakley testified that he nad a wife living in Peoria to whose support he contributed from his pension, and Judge Epler decided that the special act of the Legislature permitting the soldiers to vote here applied to only such of them as had no wives or had abandoned them. He held that the residence of the wife was the legal home of the husband, and that the old soldier could not vote here when he had a wife living in another city. Most of the veterans have wives in other cities of the State.

HAD TOO MANY KEYS. A Calistoga Hotel Man Arrested by

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—A strange mistake on the part of the police was discovered Friday in Judge Belcher's court, when a well-to-do hotel man was freed from a humiliating charge. It was all on account of a big ring of keys.

It appears that Philip Richter is part owner of the Calistoga Hotel of Calistoga.

About three months ago he paid a visit to San Francisco, and, by mishap, brought with him a lot of spare keys to guest chambers, all properly tagged. While here he stayed at a hotel on Grant avenue, and some amateur detective noticed the keys and jumped to the conclusion that he was a burglar. The proprietors turned the matter over to the police, and Richter was arrested by officers, who, after in specting the keys, held them as conclusive evidence that their prisoner was waiting an opportunity to rob the hotel.

The true facts of the case came to light Vaughn, had left him after a quarral.

SEATTLE (Wash.) April 13.—Allan Mc-Donald, a young man whose parents are said to be wealthy residents of Toronto, Canada, but who has lately been playing the piano in a disreptuable house occupied by colored women, was found dead in his room today. Novalato, the Wealthiest Hacienda in the State of Sinaloa,

A Battle with a Band of Gilas-I Strange and Furious Reptile— An American Miner's Love Adventure.

ALTATA (Mex.,) April 3, 1895 .- (Specia ice.) Travel in Mexico is full of surprises. One rainy night that settled down upon us in the village of Pericos, was to surprise the boys that the an it was to surprise the boys that the allnouncement was made that, instead of riding out into the country and going into camp, as was our custom, we should put up at "The Hotel." To our surprise we were assigned to a sleeping apartment next to the roof, upon the ground ficor, with no window and but a single door. apartment was illuminated by a tal-candle that flickered badly, as the door must remain open to supply us with the air we breathe. The boys, Saunders and Rogers, were elated; they were to pass the night in "The Hotel." But judge of the night in "The Hotel." But Juage or their surprise at having to spread their blankets upon the ground, although in fact they were stopping at "The Hotel." Fleas—we were unaccustomed to their pranks, but they are of the hereditaments of a Mexican village hotel. Such a surof a Mexican village hotel. Such a surprise as was in store for us during the night could not have taken place in the State of Indiana, where the impounding laws are enforced; there swine, even though mothers attended by their precious young, may not run at large upon the streets, much less invade the sleeping apartments of the hotels, where, if, by chance, the guests should be resting upon the ground, as in our case, and restless, as we were tossing from side to side, might all unconsciously roll over upon an unsuspecting pig. Under the circumstances it were in the nature of the pig to squeal, and in the pig. Under the circumstances it the nature of the pig to squeal, and in the nature of the mother of the pig to devour nature of the mother of the pig to devour nature of the mother of the pig to devour the guest, a process we narrowly escaped. The coffee served at Delmonico's was not as good as that we sipped at "The Hotel" in Pericos. Here, in a flaring cup for coffee they served nectar for the gods. As for "jerked" sun-dried beef; yielding, stringy and rebounding, and cold "tortillas" (the most flexible and adhesive sort of pancake) with impartialty we awarded the premium to "The Hotel." The charge was 50 cents for lodging and 50 cents a meal, $4.56 for the three, and at settlements no rebates were suggested way of accidental occurrences, for they re incident to inadequate impounding in the State of Sinaloa.

In the morning we mounted our chargearly, and trotted off in the direction Novalato, the wealthiest "hacjenda" in State of Sinaloa.

the State of Sinaloa.

Readers have not failed to meet with comracters who were both equivocal and insinuating, from whom an affirmative indication can not be drawn; the hints owell set off the one against the other that, from the apparent abundance of information all deductions were doubtful, if not dangerous. Such was the character of the direction minutely detailed by a Mexican dangerous. Such was the character of the direction minutely detailed by a Mexican with twickling eyes, who emphasized upon the tips of his fingers, by touching them with his thumb, the landmarks we should note and the turns in the road that musc be observed, should we ever hope to reach Novalato, and such, also, proved to be the character of the road.

It put off in the right direction, and for miles promised that in general it followed a line, yet it became less and less of a road, and without apparent cause curved gracefully to the right, but, to compensate for any suspicion that might arise curved gracefully to the right, but, to com-pensate for any suspicion that might arise that it was not the road to Novalato, it became more distinct; it turned slightly to the left and plunged into a dense for-est, where the trees were all bound to-gether with vines. Why should we turn back? It was a traveled road, and so ce-centric that it might at any time expand-into a broad highway and head straight for Novalato, which it promised to do over and over again, but shortly afterwards each time narrowed down again and put-off a point or two further from our course.

for Novalato, which it promised to do over and over again, but shortly afterwards each time narrowed down again and put-off a point or two further from our course. We fell to discussing this road and to cussing the Mexican with the twinkling eyes at alternate intervals. Then our horses took fright, and reared and plunged and tried to retreat. We had an audience. The audience hissed us as never were actors hissed before who kept to their parts. Three animals or insects, monsters or reptiles, a mixture of spider, smake and alligator, called a gila, advanced and hissed. They were about a yard in length, four inches across the back, had four short, stout legs, long finger-like toes, provided with needle-pointed fangs. As they advanced, hissing like serpents, with their gleaming eyes fixed upon us, and darting out their tongues, they lashed the earth with their fasti-like tails, and opened and closed their mouths with a snap.

This was an agreessive war upon their part, attended by unspeakable expressions of hatred and rage, which were insufficient, yet another preliminary caluculated to terrify an energy and cause him to retreat, was clearly-defined disdain, made manifest by opening the mouth to its utmost capacity, showing all its teeth while giving a lateral vibration to the tongue; it fixed its eyes upon the enemy, and, forcing the air out from the throat deep as the lungs, blowing its bodorous breath in the face of Re foc.

scure and undefined, but I assented and service who kept to their Three admains or insects, montreast and alligator, called a galder, and alligator, called a galder of the season of th blowing its odorous breath in the face of the for.

In an emergency requiring instant action intuitively the right thing is likely to occur. A pistol or a rifle is a most unreliable weapon in a snake fight, and this was what it was, excepting that the snakes were provided with legs and claws. My eye, all unconsciously for the moment, was measuring the dimensions of a mesquit club that lay in the road. Saunders and Rogers were occupied just then in lodging trees, their horses frightened lipringing from the saddle, the mesquit had proved sound. Napoleon did it in detail. I emulated his example. But Naddleon never played ball. The advance was now coming on the double quick, its read higher than heretofore, having ceased of fall the ground with its tail, so intent as it upon the business of its liking. The first strike was a true hit. Out at the blow fell below the belt, and in the lag would have been claimed to be a suf, but, stunned, and time given for two ore hits before the third was in the lat.

first, and the third made better time than the second. These independent forces sought to reach the enemy at the same moment, but seemed to have depended upon a mistaken calculation. The gila is the only poisonous reptile of the Hazard kind. The effect of their bite is instantaneous. Their poison, unlike that of a snake, paralyzes the heart instead of the lungs, but is not in all cases fatal. The last gila golloped to the charge sidewise, or, as Saunders obthe heart instead of the lungs, but is in all cases fatal. The last gila golloped to the charge sidewise, or, as Saunders observed, in echelon; but never for a moment removed his eye from mine. Another paipable hit and the day was ours. Their armor of scales is black, with yellow tints. Resuming our journey, we overtook a Mexican boy, who informed us that we were following the wrong road, but might reach our destination without retracing our steps. We were glad to leave this road, for it occurred to us that the scrvices of the man with the twinkling eyes, and such of his friends as may have accompanied him, might not be as readily dispensed with as the gilas were. A tiresome ride, along paths that were unfrequented; at length we wedged our way through thickets, and, coming out into an open space, we recognized our camp at a glance. A banyan tree that had usurped sole jurisdiction of all that parcel of

"Not so to me," said Saunders. "It's Bismarck in the tiger act, one paw on Paris."

To me it was no other than the Pope. Ours was a model camp. Even the smoke from the fire found a natural flue up among the arches, through which it was drawn. A heavy dew falls like rain every night. It serves to keep life in vegotation during the drouths. Hardly had we settled down, when a horseman came loping up, and, dismounting, said: "How are you, gentlemen. I promised my horse that we would rest at this spot. I hope it's all agreeable—should as soon disappoint my wife as my horse."

We assured him that it was all agreeable. He was an American-miner. From the way he rolled his oigarette, and walled his eye, and cleansed his throat, I knew that to set him going would be equivalent to a fine evening's entertainment. He stoo's ix feet two. straight as an arrow, and seemed to be built of whalebone.

"This tree of ours never nudged me as looking like the Pope," said. he; "I never saw a Pope. I saw a priest, and rubbed against him, too. I can give you a nudge or two there. My prospecting was ordinary like for three years or four years, and then one day I struck it rich. It was up the Sierra Madres, three days' ride on mule back from Culiacan. When you strike it see to it that no swelling of the head sets in. I sold my mine to a company for $180,000 in gold, and then they employed me as their superintendent. So long in Mexico I'd got to be a part of it; so long knocking around, and all at once to become a fixture and my time no longer my own. A pretty senorita in a town a day's travel from my camp was in total ignorance of the journeys she had cost me. I was always on business, but, after getting there, my business was to ride back again, happy if I had only caught a glimpse of her. Now I'd become a fixture this could not go on.

"But, said I, Till make another trip: I'll tell her how it is, and see if we can't settle it up."

"Nerved up to it. I went straight to her, and when I told her how it was she said she knew 't all the tim

I'll tell her how it is, and see if we can't settle it up.'

Nerved up to it, I went straight to her, and when I told her how it was she said she knew it all the time, and was rather provoked herself that I had found reason for so many delays, so in the morning we were to be married. In the morning no priest was in town. I suggested the civil judge should perform the ceremony. She objected. I was desperate, and said, 'Now or never.' At last she consented that the marriage ceremony might be performed by the judge. The custom of this country recognizes no marriage contract as valid in the eyes of society unless the ceremony is performed by a Catholic priest. There was no alternative. A pirest must retie the knot.

'If found one. He was robed, cowled, fat, bland and cunning. He told me that the job would cost $500. He was familiar with the case. He had kept up the fermentation that excluded us from society. Avarice was his strong trait. I told him the job would cost $500. He was familiar with the case. He had kept up the fermentation that excluded us from society. Avarice was his strong trait. I told him that I would pay a reasonable fee, but would not consent to being held up. At last he dropped to $20. It was our desire that the ceremony be performed in our own house, but no, the rules required that the outward rites take place within the church. To this I agreed, and thought the interview at an end, when the priest informed me that there was yet another form preliminary. I must confess my sins. My religion has always been obscure and undefined, but I assented and we went to church. Seating himself comfortably, he had me kneel in front of him. You see I was working for the reputation of my wife.

"Now, confess thy sins,' said he.

"Father,' I replied,' my sins are manifold. I cannot think where to begin.'

"Confess the bad things you have said and done."

"Father, I have said many bad things."

One day he went into the tunnel with me. He had his long priesty lrobe around him. We had opened a rich pocket that day. Nuggets of gold were strewn about. He fingered them and commented on their purity and beauty until I estimated that he had about $200 worth of specimens pocketed, when I slipped away and instructed the guard, whose duty it was to search the miners, not to fail to search the priest, to empty every pocket, and then, hiding behind a projecting rock, awaited results. The guard was a German, armed with a Winchester, a combination that may be depended upon.

THAT CHURCH DISPUTE.

DEPORT OF THE PRESBYTERY ON THE MATTER.

Will not Interfere—Says the Congregation Should Divide the Money and Build Separate Houses of Worship.

As was briefly stated yesterday the Presbytery in session at San Diego had refused to interfere with the quarrel now pending in the First Presbyterian Church of this city. The full report of the action is here given. The Presbytery devoted one whole day to the issue raised by the removal of the First Presbytz-lan Church. Early Thursday morning the Committee on Bills and Overtures presented the following reports.

moval of the First Presbytesian Church. Early Thursday morning the Committee on Bills and Overtures presented the following report:

"A number of papers have been put in our hands for consideration. Among them are certain overtures pertaining to the removal of the First Presbytarian Church from Second and Broadway to Twentieth and Figueroa. Therein we find a protest against the removal from and vasating of the central section of the city, signed by 153 members of the congregation, invoking the Presbytery to reatrain the removal, a remonstrance from the Third Presbyterian Church invoking the Presbyterian Church invoking the Presbyterian Church invoking the Presbytery to restrain the First church from encoching upon a territory aleady occupied, and a petition from the session of the First church asking the Presbytery to reatry use action as it had taken. To these your committee reply that, to the Presbytery belongs the 'unquestioned authority to locate churches, whether they be new ones proposing to build, or old ones proposing a change of location. The action of the First church in determining to change its location from Second and Broadway, whether wise or unwise, appears to have been orderly and legal. However much we may and do sympathize with the protestants, we do not see how we can remedy their grievance without an undue exercise of episcopal authority, nor do we believe the Presbytery has power to compel a division of the fund acquired by sale of property. But your committee, while conceding the apparent legality of the congregational action protested against, recommend to the Presbytery has power to compel a division of the fund acquired by sale of property. But your committee, while conceding the apparent legality of the congregational action protested against, recommend to the Presbytery has power to compel a division of the fund acquired by sale of property. But your committee, while conceding the apparent legality of the congregational action protested against, recommend to the Presbytery before comm

the Third church to see if there may not be terms of adjustment on which both may agree.

"In view of our answers to the two preceding protests we advise that no action be taken in respect to petitions of the First church asking for our ratification of their action."

As soon as the report was heard it became manifest that it could not carry the sympathy of the Presbytery. A number of amendments and substitutes were offered, but voted down. In course of the discussion the following substitute was offered: "Resolved, that in view of the fact that the ground purchased by the First Presbyterian Church for the creation of its house of worship is within the bounds of the field occupied by the Third Presbyterian Church, to which location the Third Church strenuously objects as injurious to its interests and imperilling its life, this Presbytery expresses its disapproval of the action thus taken by the First church and hereby requires it to select a location in a section of the city not occupied by a Presbyterian Church."

The vote taken on this stood 32 to 22, and was declared lost by the moderator. After further attempts to force an acceptable alternative the committee's report was adopted. Thus the Presbytery waives its right to exercise episcopal authority in this case and while refusing to approve is content to pursue a policy of non-interference.

The Chamber of Commerce had a domation from Orange county yesterday that made it stand around with its hands in its pockets and survey the dray with wild despair as the problem of getting the fairy-like gift upstairs presented itself for solution. The donation was nothing less than a solid block of the peat soil of Orange county, ten feet in depth, and weighing 2500 pounds. It is good, rich, black soil, and weighty to a degree—
when it comes to carrying it upstairs.
For the present the tail pillar of dirt leans reposefully up against the outer wall of the building, pending the arrival of a force strong enough to convey it up into, the exhibition hall.

Orange county seems to run to giant exhibits just now, for, accompanying the aforesaid lump of dirt, comes an exhibit of mammoth beets, cabbage and cornstalks, not to mention several boxes of their redoubtable oranges and lemons grown on this same peat soil.

The chamber is generally sprucing up and preening its feathers for La Fiesta.
The boys are all squeezing lemons for the greater honor and delectation of the Half-million Club and other visitors, who have to be regaled with lemonade as well as more substantial refreshments at the hospitable chamber. Dark and mysterious proceedings are going on behind closed doors up in the art gallery, and new exhibits are being added to nearly all the tables. Riverside sends in four boxes of oranges, and San Diego county comes to the front with five cases of citrus fruits.
Redlands is more conservative, and, ranking quality foremost, sends in one case of her celebrated oranges. O. C. Dusossuit of Highlands has sent in a display of Eureka lemns, and Mrs. S. C. Crane decorates the Duarte table with some beautiful roses.

Among other new features is an exhibit of home-made trunks by D. D. Whitney & Co., and a pyramid of the web-paper used in the Hoe perfecting press, shown by the Times-Mirror Company.

PHOENIX, April 12.—(Special Correspondence.) Phoenix has become the leading city of Arisons. For this the town is largely indebted to the enterprise of the own citizens. Located somewhat at a greeroped in other directions, as they erved. Above all, its resources are in beautiful valley of the Salt. Along for miles in both directions, are handle farms, waving crops and happy nee. The output, in addition to that sumed in the city and surrounding nps, is sent out lately only to the southeast but now through the new North and but now through the new North and the beautiful valley of the Sait. Along to the strong the sarms, waving crops and happy homes. The output, in addition to that consumed in the city and surrounding camps, is sent out lately only to the southward, but now, through the new North and Bouth road, also to the northward. For years the wheat crop of this valley has turnished a large proportion of the flour consumed in Tucson and the towns and camps tributary thereto. This alone was a matter of a good many thousand dollars a month. The shipments abroad of alfalfa and barley hay, and latterly of alfalfa-fed cattle, have also been considerable.

With the new road northward, built only a month, a big trade has been established in farm products. Already from the North End complaints come that the demand is greater than the supply.

Next to agriculture, in its many phases here. Phoenix is a commercial town. The town has numerous tributaries in mining camps, some of them of great merit. The new railroad has resulted in a visible increase of business. The amount of treight shipped is far beyond expectations. Numerous new residences are going upparticularly in the various "additions," where some fine houses are in course of srection.

The people are enterprising. Their Chamber of Commerce of over two hundred members is ever advertising their resources.

While Phoenicians often disagree on other matters, yet when a matter for the course of the matters, yet when a matter for the consumer of the process.

apply, the town was naturally built of slobes.

Another feature to be noted regarding his town is that it is on the railroad. Herein lie Tucson's resources. It is a sommercial town. From here merchantise and supplies for mining camps are sent everywhere. The wholesale business almost equals that of its home trade. In the railroad having two railroad divisions leadquarters here is another resource. The employees residing at Tucson are aid an average, the year through, of $30,000 a month. This is an important item. From this the newer Tucson is coming sut. Many residences have been built in the past few years, largely of brick. They are handsome, modern structures, on the ride, straight streets of the newer Tuccon, and probably the majority are owned railroad employees. Young trees have sen set out, and when this shade comes of its growth Tucson town will be a commation of American and Mexican. The population partake somewhat of the mervative. for more canals of late. Water storage propositions, to store the supply of rains railing in torrents and flowing uninterrupted to the sea are being descanted upon. The underground flow of the Santa Cruz is considerable, and the City Council has requested the Board of Regents of the University to have the irrigation engineer of the institution report on the best and most economical means of utilizing the flow in question. The request will be complied with, and a considerable increased acreage on the mega and valleys about Tuscon will probably eventually be the result. The mines about the city are of importance, the most prominent being the big fifty-stamp mill at Mammoth—a gold property in operation for years. English capitalists are understood to be about investing there to the extent of $200,000, but nothing is known publicly in that regard as yet.

PRESCOTT (Ariz.,) April 12.—(Special Correspondence.) Prescott offers a prospect as different from that of the towns of Southern Arizona as another section of the world. Altitude and latitude units here in giving a cooler climate and groves of handsome trees everywhere about. The landscape is of the massive order.

The chief resource here is mining. All about, in every direction, mineral-bearing ledges are worked for their hidden wealth. In addition to long teams and wagons carrying almost a carload, trains of pack burros are a daily sight, laden with ore or concentrates. As a mining field the region is yet comparatively virgin. Capitalists are now becoming interested, however, and an era of deep mining is dawning. The gold produced in Yarapai county in 1893 was 16,937 ounces; in 1894 it increased to 43,932 ounces; and the outlook for 1895 is good for it reaching 200,000 ounces.

Sheep-raising and cattle-raising are important resources here.
With the new railroad Prescott will undoubtedly acquire growth and additional business. From hereabouts lumber will form an important article of commerce with the southern part of the Territory. Lumber for the southern region has heretofore come thousands of miles, largely from the Puget Sound country.
This region will become popular as a summer resort this season from the southward. Game is abundant, there are water and shade, cliff dwellings and prehistoric ruins, hot springs and sylvan attractions. The population of the town is about 3000, all of them Americans.

Recently a railroad laborer at Prescott raised a check for 25 cents to $25, and succeeded in cashing it and escaping.

A valuable quarry of red standatone has been located north of Prescott that the new railroad makes marketable. The supply is inexhaustible and easily quarried. The stone stands a pressure of 30,000 pounds and han a fine grain and superior color. Wherever Arizona sandstone is now shipped this supply can be shipped at competition rates: Large shipments will probably be made to Phoenix.

NOGALES.

NOGALES, April 12.—(Special Correspondence.) Nogales is an international town, as much, or nearly so, Mexican as American. The town is probably the most enterprising for its size of any in the Territory. Here they have built a fine wagon road to the Oro Blanco mining camp, and will build roads in Mexico from mining districts, bringing more trade to their town. The customs service of the two countries employs many people here. Mexican silver is largely in circulation on both sides, and prices go up and down with the fluctuation of that uncertain medium. The cattle interests of both sides bring here a good share of trade.

ATTEMPTED JAIL DELLVERY.

An ingentious and well-nigh successful break for liberty was made by half a dozen hobos confined in the County Jail Thursday night. They had manufactured an effective saw out of the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on our control of the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on the steel spring in an old shee, and, climbing on the steel spring in the steel spring and shee and climbing on the steel spring in the steel spring when their work was fortunately discovered by Deputy Sheriff N. A. Ulm, which, of course, put an end to the proceedings and led to the discovery of their improvised tool.

The jail is notably unsafe, and was a constant source of trouble to Sheriff Michols, through uncassing vigilance, has managed thus far to prevent a delivery, but unless the jail is remodeled and made secure, it can only be a cuestion of time shen some desperate inmate will force the unsuitable walls, and turn the inmates loose. Of course the prisoners confined in the cells are safe enough, but there are always prisoners outside of them who can endeavor to take advantage of the glowing opportunity to escape.

To the Imperial Chemical Mig. Co.:
Gentlemen: So much has been said in the newspapers about the color of my hair, I deem it but just to say it is due to your Imperial Hair Regenerator. I found the Court Hairdreaser in London was appyring it to the ladies in high social oosition, and first had it applied by him, and now, during my stay in New York I have had the application. The color obtained is most beautiful, uniform, and, best of all. I find it harmiess. Your preparation has my cordial recommendation. I believe there is nothing in the world for the hair like it.

A Great Tempest Stirred Up in a

Teapot. After a lengthy conference last evening it was announced as the determination of the advisory board of the fiesta that consent would not be given to have "the little red schoolhouse" float in the children's-day parade. At a meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday morning the former action of the advisory board in not consenting to there being any float in the parade in question was sustained.

This situation led to the holding of a conference last evening at fiesta headquarters between members of the advisory board and a delegation of gentlemen announced to be citizens and understood to be representatives of the American Protective Associa

Newspaper men were refused admission and the conference continued for fully an hour. Some loud talk was heard. When the doors were was heard. When the doors were thrown open the men who were understood to represent the American Protective Association adjourned to another part of the building and, after remaining there for nearly half an hour, left the building.

Hardships of Negroes Who Joined Mexican Colonization Society.

clated Press Leased-wire Ser HOUSTON (Tex.,) April 13.—Alexander codwin, a bright and intelligent young colored man, gives an interesting acco of the experiences and hardships endured by the negroes who joined the Mexican Colonization Company from Georgia and other Southern States, who were taken to the company's lands in the State of Durango, Mexico. Goodwin escaped from the company's lands in the State of Durango, Mexico. Goodwin escaped from the colony. The colonists were promised houses, beds and comfortable quarters and food for all. None of the conditions of the articles of agreement have been compiled with. The people are thoroughly disgusted and would willingly return home were they allowed to do so, but they are guarded by armed Mexicans or Spanlards and are not allowed to leave the place.

The colonists are housed, or rather penned, in large inclosures built of blocks of clay and dried sod. Each of these inclosures is subdivided into small sections or apartments, and each apartment is occupied by one, two and sometimes three families. Access is gained by but one entrance to these square structures. Their occupants desiring shelter are compelled to build an overhead covering of cornshucks and whatever else they can find. The food provided for the farmhands, who work in the fields from surrise to sunset, consists of beef, coarse bread and of corn and water.

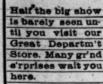

The hands are aroused from slumber at 4:30 o'clock by the blowing of a whistle rad, after a scant breakfast, hitch their teams of mules and start for the field and they continue their labor until sunset. The Sabbath is not observed as a day of prayer and rest, and anyone not caring to put in the seven days in the field are allowed to remain in their quarters, but without rations, instructions being that those who will not work on Sunday shall not eat.

WALK THROUGH HANKOW.

A WALK THROUGH HANKOW. Take a walk with me, for instance, brough the great city of Hankow. It conthrough the great city of Hankow. It con-tains 1,000,000 people. It is as big as Chi-cago. It is surrounded by a wall as high as a three-story house, and so wide that three railroad trains could run side by side upon it without touching. Inside these while upon it without touching. Inside these walls there is a mass of narrow streets, sined with one, two and three-storled houses. Cutting through these there are lanes and cross streets, and most of the streets are six feet wide. The lanes are often not more than two feet wide, and both streets and alleys are covered with the vilest of elime, and you pick your way through a mass of indescribable fifth as you go through them. The widest of the streets are the great business thorough-fares, walled with stores and shops, and which are packed with a mass of Chinese humanity from sunrise until dark. This mass surges this way and that. It is worse than a jam at a county fair, and laborers, carrying all kinds of wares, push their way through it. The narrower streets are little more than alkeys walled with houses, comprising factories, dwelling and business establishments. The entrances to many of these are merely holes in the walls. Others have wide doors leading into courts and others introduce was many of these are merely holes in the wails. Others have wide doors leading into courts, and others introduce you into the shops of mechanics, where you see half-naked coolies doing the thousand and one things of a busy Chinese city. Walking through these lanes, the for-eigner seems to be taking his life in his hands. The streets are so narrow that you can stand in the middle and press the opposite walls with your hands. Two men can hardly pass, and you instinctively squeeze yourself in your efforts to tighten your skin and keep out of the collisions which appear imminent at every curve. Here comes a coolle, bare-backed and bare-legged. He is one of the thousand slop carriers of the town. A bar six feet long rests upon his shoulder, and from the ends of this hang two great buckets, each holding four gallons of the vilest slop. He comes toward you on a swinging trot, and the buckets screw up and down, and the slop spashes to and fro, as he passes you. You put your smelling bottle to your nose, draw your knees close together and hug the wall, to let him go by. Behind him come two scowling Chinamen carrying hides. They have a half-ton of raw skins swung in the center of a pole which rests upon their shoulders and they grunt and grunt in a harmony of woe as they rush toward you. Other laborers behind fellow with other loads, and you note that every couple has its own peculiar grunt or sound. Some cry "O-ah, o-h, e-he, e-he, o-ho, o-ho, e-he." The men on the wharves have their own grunt, and even men working alone make

HOW THE CHINESE DO BUSINESS.
But let us get into the business parts, of the cities and take a look at the stores. There are tens of thousands of them and they are packed together like the booths of a fair. They are all opened to the streets, and most of them are filled with customers. They are walled with shelves, and twelve feet square makes a big store. Some of them have floors of cement, some are boards and others no floors but dirt. The signboards hang up and down the stores instead of across the top as with us. These signs are so many that they almost fill the streets. They nearly cover the fronts of some of the shops, and the drug stores advertise their patent medicines by such signboards. These signs are pushed this way and that by the crowds which continually move through them. What a curious crowd it their patent meglicines by such signboards. These signs are pushed this way and that by the crowds which continually move through them. What a curious crowd it is. Jump up on this stone and take a look up and down the street. A river of Chinese humanity is flowing both ways before you, mixing in and out in an everchanging stream of blues, whites, reds and browns. There are coolies by the hundreds carrying great burdens. There are coolies harnessed to big wheelbarrows which would load down a wagon; coolies carrying barrels of oil, boxes of tea, loads of brick, buckets of ducks, and in short, everything under the Chinese sun. There are men rushing along with the big chairs of mandarins and with the little chairs of women. There are dirty boys by the hundreds who have greasy pigtails hanging down their dirty backs, and who look at you and yell out "baby-kidnaper" or "foreign devil" as soon as you back is turned. There are women who seem to almost fall as they hobble along on their mutilated feet. There are you back is turned. There are women who seem to almost fall as they hobble along on their mutilated feet. There are old Chinamen in big spectacles, and young Chinamen in silk gowns. There are dandles and dudes, scholars and servants, merchants and mechanies, each in his own dress, pushing and shoving his way through the mass. There are queer Chinamen from the country with great straw hats turned up at the sides, who gawk along like a farmer boy during his first visit to New York, and there are dilettante blase Chinese gentlemen, who move slowly along and keep up their dignity as best they can in this curious, ever-changing river of Chinese humanity.

QUEER CHINESE TRADES.

QUEER CHINESE TRADES. QUEER CHINESE TRADES.

Keep your place upon the stone and flote the queer things that are going on all around you; the street is narrow, but it is made narrower by the peddlers and squatters. It seems to be free for all, and the shoemaker, with a box like that of a blacksmith, sits and sews away in the street half soling the shoes of his customers while they wait. He uses tacks, the heads of which are as big as a nickel to hold the blacksmith, sits and sews away in the street half soling the shoes of his customers while they wait. He uses tacks, the heads of which are as big as a nickel to hold the soles, and instead of leather he puts on soles of cloth. Further on there is a fortune teller with a lot of forms and cards about him. His finger nails are a foot in length and he can tell you your past and future by the stars.

What is that veil of black hanging against the opposite wall? There is a man in a blue gown standing beside it. He has a box of money near him and his customers are many. He is selling something. It looks like horse hair, and those who leave carry away long strands, which he head and the selling fly brushes. Let us get closer. No, they are not fly brushes, they are long switches of human hair, which the Chinese buy to braid into their queues. There is a great trade in hair, and caloads of it are brought from Korea every year, and the peddiers of false hair carry on a regular business. I bought a queue myself in Hankow. It cost me 25 cents, and my Chinese servant bought two queues at the same time. I carried my queue for some weeks, and when I changed my servant it disappeared; and I have no doubt but that my boy Chang is now wearing it.

IN A CHINESE RESTAURANT.

As we go on with our walk we find hundreds of curious stores, and we see everywhere evidences that the Chinese appetite in Gargantuan, and that the mighty Chinese stomach takes much to fill it. There are stores which sell nothing but fowl and dried ducks. Goese and chickens hang from lines stretched across the from of, the store so that they make a veil shutting it off from the sidewalk. There are butcher shops where pork and mutton are offered for sale, and there are little booths in which there are great vats of water filled with live fish. We stop and with the fish peddler serve a poor customer. A small-footed woman, dressed in a long, blue cotton gown, wants a pound of fish, and the peddler pulls a large squirming fish out of the water and lays it on the counter. He takes a long knife, which is as sharp as a razor, and cuts a slice out of its quivering side. The blood flows, and he throws the remains of the now half-alive fish into the water, hoping that it may live until another customer.

comes along to buy the balance. Here is a Chinese restaurant. Let us go in and get a bite to stay our stomachs, which have been turned over and over by the disgusting sights of our trip. It consists of a dozen rooms, separated by screans of carved Chinese fretwork, on the back of which white paper is pasted. Each room is filled with teak-wood tables, which look like ebony, and which are about four feet square. There are chairs beside them, and we take our seats while the frouzy servant brings in cups of tea, with the saucers turned over their tops to keep in the aroma. We take off the saucers and till them so they act as strainers for the saucers turned over their tops to keep in the aroma. We take off the saucers and till them so they act as strainers for the cups, just touching the tea and keeping the leaves back as we drink. We are next served with a soup, filled with little bits of pork, and then with the stew, which is thick with cubes of chicken about the size of a dice. We pick these out with clean wooden chopsticks and eat the soup with a spoon. I take out my pencil and begin to sketch. A crowd gathers about me, and the Chinese waiter whose picture I have taken looks sheepish and mad. I ask as to the prices, and find that I am paying twenty-one cash, or about I cent per dish. I can get a pipe of tohacco for three cash, or one-sixth of a cent, and a good handful of watermelon seeds for fourteen cash. I am surprised to see how many people ear such seeds. They are the peanuts of China, and they are served at every theater between the acts. All classes eat them, and nearly every Chinaman has them somewhere about his clothes. There are tea saloons in every Chinaman has them somewhere about his clothes. There are tead to see how many people ear such seeds. pay $5 and upward for a good dinner. The Chinese are good cooks, and I had a num-ber of fairly good meals in the common restaurants. The chief viands were boiled chicken and rice, roast pork and roast duck, and if any tender dogs, cats or rats BOILED BREAD AND THE LAND OF Where a Man Found His Wife After THE DOUGHNUT.

THE DOUGHNUT.

I looked in vain for any signs of baking, and the Chirese have no such thing as baked bread. They boil their dough, and you can get boiled biscuits almost anywhere. They are great on frying dough in grease, and North China may be called the land of the doughnut. It is the general opinion that the Chinese live almost certificial ways. the land of the doughnut. It is the general opinion that the Chinese live almost entirely upon rice. This is a great mistake. Rice is expensive everywhere, and the people of the north are too poor to eat it. They use millet seed and sorghum seed, which are ground up like we grind wheat. Rice is the bread of South China, and pork is the chief meat all over the empire. The average Chinese hog is the dirtiest animal in the world. It gets its living off of the foul refuse of the city's streets, and the biggest of the Chinese cities permit the pigs to run wild within them. There are different grades of pork in China, as there are in America, and the finest kind of pork comes from an island south of Hongkong. The pigs here are fed upon chestnuits. They are shipped to all parts of China, and they bring high prices. The better class of Chinese will not touch rats, and dogs are usually eaten by the well-to-do Chinese only as medicine. Sucking pigs form a part of each big feast, but they are brought on the table cut up into little cubes, so that they can be eaten with chopsticks.

WORMS AND SNAKES FOR FOOD.

The Chinese are fond of some kinds of worms, and there is a greenish-brown worm which comes from the rice field which brings high prices in the markets. They eat slik-worm grubs, and in some parts of the empire the poorer people eat snakes. In Amoy and Swatow snakes are sold for food and they are used to make soup. They are quite expensive, and a good-sized snake of the right variety will bring 75 cents. I found the Chinese restaurants well patronized, and there are peddling cooks everywhere. The average laborer buys his lunch where he works if he belongs to the cities, and whereverthere is a band of workmen you find from one to a dozen lunch peddlers. It is the same as to smoking. On nearly every corner you find a table with a lot of pipes upon it, and a man standing beside it ready to rent them for a fraction of a cent a smoke. The pipes are made of copper, and they are a cort of water pipe with which you draw the smoke through the water before it comes linto your mouth. The bowls hold about a thimbleful of to-bacco, and the pipe has to be lighted about every two minutes. Of late years the Chinese of the scaports have taken to smoking eigarettes, and you find great WORMS AND SNAKES FOR FOOD.

(Cincinnati Enquirer:) The construction of city flats is such that it seems as if flat of city flats is such that it seems as if flat thieves ought to be able to obtain almost unlimited plunder with impunity. But they are forever getting caught and most of them are the lowest grades of speak thieves.

of them are the local states and their method is rare, so the experience of the head of a modest West-side flat this week is remarkable. He arrived home from business about 6 o'clock, and at once observed indications that something unusual had been going on.

cations that something unusual had been going on.

It was evident that a thief had been around, and that he had gone away without taking much, if anything, with him, unless it was the resident's wife, for she was nowhere to be found. The husband presumed that she had gone to notify the police, so he sat down and waited; but after an hour or two he became anxious and inquired of the neighbors.

They had heard or seen nothing either of thief or wife. Then there was trouble. The husband hurried to the nearest police station. His wife hadn't been there, and a general alarm was sent out for patrolmen to watch for her, while two detectives returned to the house and helped push inquiries.

to watch for her, while two detectives returned to the house and helped push inquiries.

The kitchen and dining-room looked as if the wife had been interrupted in her work, but there was no other sign of her. The detectives looked very wise, asked many questions that seemed impudent to the distracted husband, made some notes and wert away.

The husband was in a bad shate of mind, but not so upset that he didn't presently realize that he needed food. Rather than go to a restaurant, he went to his refrigerator to see what there might be to eat. He opened the door, and there, curied up in the ice chamber, was his wife. She wasn't huirt; she hadn't even fainted.

She was simply sound asleep, somewhat stupefied with the close air and cramped in every joint, but otherwise in good condition and glad to get out. She explained that ahe caught a thief at work, and that he clapped her into the refrigerator before she could scream. Once in she could do nothing. There was no inner handle to the door. She cried aloud, and, finding no response, just waited to be discovered, dreading all the while that her wedding spoons had been taken. They were not, though; they had been placed, with other valuables, in the center of the dising-room table for carrying off, and the incident ended happily.

seem tame in comparison. The greatest inventor that ever lived has established himself in a dell hidden among vagrant mountains in New Jersey wilds. The neighborhood has no inhabitants with the exception of the two hundre; odd men whom the wizard employs in his incantations. The place is an old deserted mine, once known as Ogden, but the rock-a-bye railroad with balky engines and wheezy, charrhal cars that meander that way when the wind is not too strong has christened it Edison. There are buildings all over Edison, large buildings that walk about the premises if you touch a button. In fact, they rarely do anything at Edison's without pressing a button. But one must without pressing a button. But one must know which button to press, for, although

"We are progressing, progressing," he caid, when informed that his retreat had been invaded for the purpose of getting information concerning the latest and the greatest of his inventions, the one which is being eagerly awaited, and which is being eagerly awaited, and which very few have had a chance to see. That is the combination of the phonograph with the kinetoecope, the contrivance to which Mr. Edison applied the term kinetograph on this occasion.
"The object of this machine," he said, "is to afford the spectator two inventions in one; that is, two senses are simultaneously appealed to. Suppose, we will say, an opera is to be reproduced. The phonograph already repeats the sound. The kinetoscope affords a view of the movements. Now, however, we wish to combine the two, and combine them far more effectively than ever their distinct elements have heretofore been rendered by separate instruments.

"Thus, if one wished to hear and see the concert or the opera, it would only be necessary to sit down at home, look upon a screen and see the performance, reproduced exactly in every movement and at the same time, the voices of the players and singers, the music of the orchestra, the various sounds that accompany a performance of this sort, will be reproduced exactly. The end attained is a perfect illusion. One really hears and sees the play, because the conditions precedent to the suitable impressions upon eye and ear are obtained."

Mr. Edison's hearing has improved very much in the past year, owing, perhaps, to his perfect physical condition. He spoke well and distinctly, and is never, apparently, as much impressed with the wonders he performs as are his workmen. He was asked if ordinary sights and scenes, the Pope in the Vatican, or a speech at a mass-meeting, could be as effectively handled.

"Far more easily," he replied, "that is the least difficult part of the problem. Even now, the spectator could be treated to a perfect reproduction of Gladstone making a speech to the House of Commons. This would be shown of life size and, so far as the spectator is concerned, would be the real scene. For every word, every gesture of the grand old man, the gestures of each spectator and the sounds made on the occasion would be reproduced exactly. And, of course, 200 years hence the same scene could be thrown up at will—a new way of recording history, you see."

The Pres-ident's inauguration can be treated in the same way. Pope Leo and his cardinals, may be seen and heard for unnumbered centuries to come."

Mr. Edison's blue eyes lighted up with enthusiasm.

"What a way to write history!" he repeated, echoing the words of his questioner. "Well. I had never thought of that particularly, and yet it is a way to write it, isn't it? How much more effectively one could convey to future generations an idea of the President than words and writing could. In fact, written records would cease to have their historical importance."

Another use for the invention, namely, the sentimental one, had not occurred to Mr. Edison either. Yet the machine ought to be welcomed by lovers—it insures the perpetual presence of the adored object. Has not the poet said:

of vaccinsting land? That experiment, I see, has actually been made with success. The object of this process is to improve the quality of the soil. The law of diminishing returns, so long an important factor in political economy, is thus overcome. To explain the method so as to be comprehensible to the popular mind is not easy. You see, certain roots of plants which flourish in inferior soils have been ascertained to nourish a parasite. These parasites afford the plant, through their organic functions, strength and vitality. In return, the parasites are fed and sustained by certain properties of the root. One supports the other, and the two tegether have a decided effect upon the soil in which they grow. Now, this process of nature has been successfully applied by science. What we may term an agricultural misses obtained, and the impoverished soil into which it is introduced is almost at once bettered. The process is permanently fertilizing, and cannot fail to effect in time a revolution in farming."

enlarged from day to day. In about six weeks it will be completed, and today has a very strange look. It contains the only stone-breaker in the world of its extraordinary kind. It will reduce a mountain of ordinary size to dust in one day. There are telephones everywhere and phonographs for making memorands connected with the desks. There are no houses, so candles or lanterse. Labor is reduced to a minimum. A day's toil consists largely in pressing a series of buttons. And they never think this extraordinary in the queer place. Even the 'prentice boys are very scientific. They release the glant forces of nature and hold them in check again. every instance have been unsatisfactory and contradictory. Thus in Southern Germany it was found that, during a period of twenty-five years, the number of rainy days in the waxing moon that the number of rainy days in the waxing moon from new to full) was to the number in the waning moon nearly as six to twe, while in the south of Francs the ratio was as nine to eleven, and nearly opposite results were obtained at Paris. There has been the same experience in America and the observations have proved nothing. Those who are willing to accept these as signs do so from the coincidences they may have happened to observe, carefully noting the instances which have proved the sign and neglecting those that do not.

They are in fact convinced because they desire to be convinced of what really possesses no foundation whatever, observations made with the view of determining whether or not the moon produces any other changes in the weather have given contradictory results. Thus 100 new moons were followed by fifty-eight changes of weather; 100 rull moons by sixty-four changes. This might seem to show that the new moon is contrary to what is commonly believed in another was a contrained observation goes to prove the weather.

short all scientific observation goes to prove that the moon has no influence whatever over the weather.

Practical meteorology can hardly be said to have attained to the rank of a science, however. We know very little about the causes which bring about changes in the weather. Until our knowledge of electricity and magnetism is vastly extended, our forecasts of the weather must be in the majority of cases mere guesses. We understand the cause of the trade winds; but we cannot explain the whiriwind in our streets, much less can we say a day or even an hour in advance when and where the next cyclone will atrike. Wind and rain storms follow no known law, they are variable on copyrious, being influenced outpends. Mountain chains, and considered currents, mountain chains, and considered conditions. AN INSPIRED PATRIOT.

HENRY WATTERSON'S STRIKING EULOGY OF ABRAHAM LIN-COLN, THE MARTYR PRESIDENT.

He Was Heaven Sent to Save the South from Itself and the Union for All-The Kentucky Orator Among Lincoln's Friends in Chicago-A Southern Man's Candid Testimony.

When Henry Watterson approached the] eak upon that ever-fresh topic, "Abra am Lincoln," he was greeted with ham Lincoln," he was greeted with round of applause. There was no formative of introduction, and he began his address without the customary "Ladies and Gentle-men." The Chicago Tribune's report, from which we quote, says that he quickly caught the interest of his auditors and held

Mr. Watterson spoke with deliberation, pausing at the strong points to allow them to impress his hearers. The manuscript of his lecture lay before him, but he seldem referred to it except when he read letters or extracts of speeches, and then he put on his spectacles. The keynote of his theme was that Lincoln was the man of the hour, sent by Heaven not only to save the Union, but to save the South—to save it from itself. Frequently the audience was moved to enthusiastic applause. When the speaker first mentioned Lincoln's name in connection with the prophecy that the Union could not exist half free and half in slavery, and that he did not believe the Union would fall, there was a spontaneous burst of applause. When Mr. Watterson came to relate how Lincoln's inaugural address was delivered as though he had been delivering such addresses all his, life, there was another demonstration by his hearers. The stories of how Lincoln showed himself the master of nonstration by his hearers. The stories of how Lincoln showed himself the master of the men in his Cabinet who thought the backwoodsman from Illinois would be a mere teel in their hands were also well

The speaker's account of the Douglas debate and his tribute to the loyalty of the "Little Glant," were especially pleasing to a Chicago gathering. Mr. Watterson told how he stood upon the platform near Lincoln when the latter made his inaugural speech, how he tried to take the President's hat, and how Douglas reached over his arm. took the hat himself, and held it until the speech was finished. Stress was laid by the lecturer on Lincoln's kindness to the South during the war; on his humanity and common sense, and ability to meet all emergencies.

Mr. Watterson began his oration by a reference to the poise and dignity of the statesmen in knee breeches and powdered wigs, who signed the Declaration of Independence and framed the Constitution, and who made their influence felt upon life and thought long after the echoes of Bunker Hill and Yorktown had died away. It was not until the institution of African slavery got into politics as a vital force that Congress became a bear garden. The men who signed the Declaration and their immediate successors were succeeded by a set of party leaders much less decrows. immediate successors were succeeded by a set of party leaders much less decorous and much more self-confident. Continu-ing the lecturer said, in part:

ing, the lecturer said, in part:

"There were Seward and Sumner and hase, Corwin and Ben Wade. Trumbull ad Fessenden, Hale and Collamer and Grimes and Greeley, our latter-day Frank-lin. There were Toombs and Hammonds and Sildell and Wigfall, and the two little glants, Douglas and Stephens, and Yancey and Mason and Jefferson Davis. With them soft words buttered no parships and they cared little how many pitchers might be broken by rude ones. The issue between them did not require a diagram to explain it. It was so s'mple a child could understand it. It read, human slavery against human freedom, slave labor against free labor, and involved a conflict as inevitable as it was irrepressible.

The sentence was spergnant with meaning. The man beraware and the meaning of the solid part of disregard in the head of a moment disappeared. The sentence was spergnant with meaning. The man beraware commission from God on high! He said:

Mr. Westerson reviewed the famous debate with Stephen A. Douglas, and then said:

"I knew Judge Douglas well; I admired respected, loved him. I shall never forget the day he quitted Washington to go to his home in Lilknos to return no more. He was then a dying man. He had burned the candle at both ends from his boyhood; an ardent, pleasure-loving, hard-working man, and though not yet 50, the candle was burned out. panied the cortege that went from the Senate chamber to the east portice of the Capitol. As Mr. Lincoin removed his lat to face the vast multitude in front and below I extended my hand to take it, but Judge Douglas, just behind me, reached over my outstretched arm and received it, holding it throughout the delivery of the inaugural address. I stood just near enough to the speaker's elbow-not to obstruct any gestures he might make though

'He delivered that inaugural address as if he had been delivering inaugural ad-dresses all his life. Firm, resonant, ear-nest, it announced the coming of a man, of a leader of men, and in its ringing tone and elevated style, the gentlemen whom h and elevated style, the gentlemen whom he had invited to become members of his political family—each of whom at bottom thought himself his master's equal or superior—might have heard the voice and seen the hand of one born to rule. Whether seen the hand of one born to rule. Whether they did or not, they very soon ascer-tained the fact. From the hour Abraham Lincoin crossed the threshold of the White House to the hour he went thence to his tragic death there was not a moment when he did not dominate the political and mili-tary situation and his official subordinates. The idea that he was overmatched at any time by anybody is contradicted by all that actually happened.

"Mr. Seward was the first victim of his own temerity. One of the most extraor-dinary incidents that ever passed between a chief and his lieutenant came about be fore the first month of the new adminis-tration had closed. The 1st of April Mr. tration had closed. The 1st of April Mr. Seward submitted a membrandum en-titled, 'Some Thoughts for the President's tration had closed. The 1st of April Mr. Seward; submitted a membrandum entitled, 'Some Thoughts for the President's Consideration.' He began this by saying: 'We are at the end of a month's administration, and yet without a policy, either foreign or domestic.' Then follows a series of suggestions hardly less remarkable for their character than for their emanation. There are quite a baker's dozen of them, for the most part filmsy and irrelevant; but two of them are so conspicuous for a lack of sagacity and comprehension that I shall quote him:

"We must change the question before the public,' says Mr. Seward, 'from one upon slavery, or about slavery, for one upon lavery, or about slavery, for one upon lavery, or about slavery, for one upon lavery, or about slavery, for one and if satisfactory explanations are not received from Spain and France, energetically, at once and if satisfactory explanations from Great Britain and Russia, and send agents into Canada, Mexico and Central America to rouse a vigorous spirit of continential independence on this continent against European intervention.

"Think of it! At the moment this advice was seriously given the head of the government by the head of the Cabinetsupposed to be the most accomplished statesman and the most actue diplomitist of his time—a Southern Confederacy had been established and all Europe was eager for some pretext to put in its oar, and effectually, finally, to secure a dissolution of the Union and the overthrow of the republican experiment in America. The government had only to make a grimace at France and Spain; to bat its eye at England and Russia, to raise up a quadruple alliance, monarchy against democracy, bringing down upon the United States the navies of the world, and doubly assuring, doubly confirming the government of Jefferson Davis."

HIS RELATION TO THE SOUTH.

HIS RELATION TO THE SOUTH. The lecturer then told how Lincoln put in the moment of his triumph, to attain it; God blighted the South to attain it. But He did attain it. And here we are this night to attest it. God's will be done on earth as it is done in beaven. But let no Southern man point finger at me because I canomize Abraham Lincoln, for he was the only friend we had at court when friends were most in need; he was the one man in power who wanted to preserve us intact; to save us from the wolves of mere passion and plunder that stood at our door; and so, as that God, of whom it has been said that when He loveth He chasteneth,' meant that we should be chastened. Lincoln was put out of the way by the bullet of an assassin, having neither lot nor parcel North or South, but a winged emissary of fate, come from the shadows of the mystic world, which Ascachylus and Shakespeare created and consecrated to traged;"

As examples of Lincoln's Mterary style

ity he said:

"His unconventionalism was only equaled by his humanity. No custodian of absolute power ever exercised it so benignly. His interposition in behalf of men sentenced to death by court-martial became so demoralizing that the generals in the field united in a round-robin protest. Both Grant and Sherman cut the wires between their headquarters and Washington to escape his interference with the iron rule of military discipline.

HELD THE NATION'S DESTINY.

Mr. Watterson concluded as follows: "Born as lowly as the Son of God, in born as lowly as the Son of God, in a hovel; of what ancestry we know not and care not; reared in penury, squalor, with no gleam of light or fair surroundings; without external graces, actual or acquired; without name or fame or official training, it was reserved for this strange being, late in life, to be snatched from obscurity, raised to supreme command at a supreme it was reserved for this strange being, late in life, to be snatched from obscurity, raised to supreme command at a supreme moment, and intrusted with the destiny of a nation.

"The great leaders of his party, the most experienced and accomplished public men of the day, were made to stand aside; were sent to the rear, whilst this fantastic figure was led by unseen hands to the front and given the reins of power. It is immaterial whether we were for him or against him—wholly immaterial. That, during four years, carrying with them such a pressure of responsibility as the world never witnessed before, he filled the vast space alloted to him in the eyes and actions of mankind, is to say that he was inspired of God, for nowhere else could he have acquired the wisdom and the grace indispensable to his mission.

"Where did Shakespeare get his genius? Where did Mozart get his music? Whose hand smote the lyre of the Scottish—lowman, and staid the life of the Germau priest? God, God, and God alone; and so surely as these were raised up by God, inspired by God was Abraham Lingoin; and a thousand years hence no story, no tragedy, no epic poom will be filled with a thousand years hence no story, no tragedy, no spic poem will be filled with greater wonder, or be followed by mankind with deeper feeling; then the

HOW LINCOLN INVADED MR. MEDILL'S SANCTUM.

"Something of a Seward Whig," He Professed Himself — A Speech of Lincoln's that Was Never Reported.

CHICAGO, April 5, 1895 .- (Special Correspondence.) About noon of a spring day in 1855 the office of the Chi-cago Tribune was invaded by a very singular apparition. The editorial essingular apparation. The curvature of a single long room, on the third floor of the "Evans Block," a building called after Dr. Evans, who also gave his name to Dr. Evans, who also gave his name to the now famous town of Evanston. It stood on a part of the ground now cov-ered by the sky-scraping Ashland Block, and, from the editorial windows, "the force" looked out upon the quagmire called Clark street, wherein, as a frequent diversion from their labors, they might see a hapless wagon sunk hub deep in in misfortune, had set the legend:

the reporters, minor editors and "spe clais"—there were not many, nor were the

the reporters, minor editors and specials"—there were not many, nor were the lines dividing their ranks and duties very sharply drawn.

To them entered, on the day in question, a very tall, angular man of dark complexion and hollow cheeks, and somewhat stooped at the shoulders. He stood half a head above six feet in height. His legs were absurdly long and thin, and he had enormous feet and hands. His head, also abnormal in its length, was heavily thatched with a shock of rumpled dark hair, and under the shagey cycbrows was a pair of deep-set eyes, whose keen, but merry twinkle went a long way toward redeeming the absurd figure from utter comicality. The visitor carried in one hand a carpet-bag about three feet long and so deep that, tall as he was, it barely cleared the floor. It seemed to be packed with all its owner's portable belongings. He glameed along the table to the editor's chair, and, in a drawling, high-keyed voice, asked the young man who occupied that throne:

"Can you tell me when I can see Dr.

"Can you tell me when I can see Dr

"Can you tell me when I can see Dr. Ray?"

Dr. Ray was then the senior editor of the Tribune. He was not in.

"Well," continued the visitor, still addressing the young man at the top of the table, "may I ask you if are the new editor from Cleveland—McDill, or Medill, or something?"

"I am Medill, the new editor," the young man answered.

"Well, I guess you'll do just as well.

The new editor asked, and with a degree of formalism quite foreign to the Chicagoan of forty years ago (for the manner of the visitor had been decidedly brusque) "Please tell me whom I have the pleasure of addressing."

"Well" (this drawling expletive for the third time) "Well, down on the Sangamon River they used to call me "Abraham Lincoln." Now they generally call me "Old Abe," though I ain't so very old either."

"Old Abe," was already a name to conjure with in Illinois. The "new editor from Ohio" directly gave to his visitor a seat and engaged him in conversation of lively interest to both. But first there was business to be done.

LINCOLN.

Volved not a few incidents in his life hitherto unrecorded.

At the first regular Repullean State convention held in Hilnols, at Bloomington in May, 1856, Mr. Medill assisted in the double capacity of delegate and reporter for the Tribune. The convention is chiefly noteworthy as the occasion on which Mr. Lincoln delivered the most eloquent speech of his life. Such at least is the testimony of the few living persons who heard it. Mr. Medill's story of the conversation and the speech have an especial interest, in view of his professional relations to the speaker.

LINCOLN ONE OF THE KEENEST AND SHREWDEST OF POLITICIANS.

During the Senatorial campaign of 1858, which engaged Mr. Lincoln's activity be fore he became an avowed candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Medill met him ofter on political business. When he went to Springfield he dined several times at the on political business. When he went to Springfield he dined several times at the Lincoln house, and partook of the fare prepared by Mrs. Lincoln's hands. Even at this early time Mr. Medill formed the opinion, which his subsequent experience only confirmed, that Mr. Lincoln was of all the "practical politicisns" of his day the keenest and the shrewdest. In organizing a party, securing the doubtful votes by presenting the issues rightly before them, and in all the details of "practical" work of a campaign Lincoln had no equal among Republicans in Illinois in those days. To send quinine to a farmer sick with the prevailing illness of the frontier, "fever 'n ague," was said to be one of his favorite devices. He had a master hand at circulars. He sometimes addressed them "to my friends," signed "A. Lincoln," At other times he wrote the addresses and circulars which were signed by the Central Committee.

It was in this campaign of 1853 that Mr. Lincoln delivered in the Representatives' hall at Springfield that famous speechfamous for its radicalism—calling for the ultimate extinction of slavery as a thing in itself "radically wrong." Such sentiment of that time, even in the radical Northern States, and Mr. Lincoln was considered by not a few of his friends to have committed political harl-kari by this speech. But, knowing Mr. Lincoln as he did, Mr. Medill felt assured that the speech was no dithyrambic outburst of sentiment, that a deliberate motive lay behind. It was not, however, until years thereafter, when Mr. Lincoln was President, rhat opportunity offered to confirm this surmiss. For, with all his bonhommie and apparent openness, Mr. Lincoln was a most secretive man, even to his close friends. But visiting at the White House in the course of the civil war, Mr. Medill found the President in a mood which seemed favorable to confidence, and squarely put to him the question: "Why did you deliver that very radical speech at the State House in the spring of 1838?"

With what seemed like affected surprise Mr. Lincoln exclaimed, "O!" then, ispeing into reserve, he put the counter-question: "What do you think was the reason?"
Getting no answer, he saw fit to lay aside his reserve and made this characteristic sxplanation:
"Well, after you fellows had got me

"Well, after you fellows had got me into that position of standard-bearer I concluded to take a stand that reflected the real heartfelt thoughts of our party on that terrible slavery question. It was ground we could afford to be beaten on in the preliminary battle with slavery. So I concluded to SAY SOMETHING THAT WOULD MAKE

EVERYBODY THINK."

And he did. "He then," says Mr. Me

And he did. "He then," says Mr. Medifi, "made the issue on which he was afterward elected. He went deeper into the heart of the great issue than even Seward ventured."

Those who remember this Springfield speech may also recall how much use Douglas made of it in the campaign of 1858 to alarm the conservatives and warn them against the "reckless demagogue," his opponent, who would emancipate the slaves. And in his reply to these attacks Mr. Linooln illustrated another phase of his character by his artful defense of the speech until, as repeated and explained by himself on the stump, it appeared to the most cautious voter as the inevitable outcome of the question from the very nature of things. FORT SUMTER, APRIL 14, 1865. Patriotic Recollections of a Vetera

Sailor. [Specially Contributed to The Times.]

Thirty years ago today was a climax in the history of the nation. The alpha and omega of the war of the rebellion was witnessed within the walls of the battered fort in Charleston Harbor, and the same flag which was lowered April 14, 1861, in in-sult amid frenzied shouts, went to the masthead April 14, 1865, in honor and from forts and ships. But few survivor able day. Nearly all have followed their

"Where the war-drums cease their throbbing And the battle-flags are furled."

Yet memory dwells upon the scene and fancy hears again the ringing words that tell from the lips of the great crator. Words that well live as long as the language in which they were spoken.

Henry Ward Beecher, that great patrictic divine, who was among the first to deaulphurize hell and teach that God was not a demon, was at his best. He commenced with his head uncovered, but the breeze raised the mischief with his long bair, so he quietly put on his hat (a black felt, uncanonical article) and wore it to the end.

Two or three extracts indicate the elevated spirit of his oration:

"Are we come to exuit that Northern hands are stronger than Southern? Noy but to rejoics that the hands of those who defended a just and benedicient government are mightier than the hands that assaulted it. Do we exuit our fallen cities? We ex-has sustained his life and health under the unparalleled burdens and sufferlogs of four bloody years, and permitted him to behold this auspicious consummation of that mational unity for which he has waited with so much pattence and fortitude, and for which he has labored with such disinterested wisdom."

There were passages in the prayer of the old chaplain, Dr. Storrs, that fell upon the ear like celestial music: "Remember those who have been our enemies, and turn their hearts from wrath and war to love and peace. Let the desolations that have come to them suffice, and unite them with us in the ties of a better brotherhood than of old, that the cities and homes and happiness they have lost may be more than replaced in the long prosperity they shall hereafter know."

Mr. Beecher held his audience to the close of his long address, which was frequently interrupted by applause. It may be of interest to state that Gen. Anderson, whose fame is inseparably linked with that of Fort Sumter, was so prostrated by his terrible experience during the bombardment that was compelled to abandon actual service. He was placed upon the retired list in 1863. After the war he removed with his family to Europe, where he died at Nice October, 1871. His remains were conveyed home in the steam frigate Guerriere; and finally, with the battle-flag of Sumter waving over them, reached their last and appropriate restingplace at West Point, April 3, 1872.

ACCOUNT OF THE RECENT STRANGE CONVULSION OF NATURE IN CUYLER'S HARBOR.

lince the middle of March, when news of he mysterious convulsions of nature in pulper's Harbor first reached the main and, various and conflicting reports of he event have been published. These resorts have had for their foundation and sole substance the slender thread of infornation furnished to E. W. Gaty by letters rom Capt. William G. Waters, the resilent proprietor of the island; yet they ufficed to stir one newspaper corresponsent to such mental activity that, seated this comfortable desk on the mainland, in imagination took a trip across the tormy main to the island, and produced a couple of really delightful accounts of the upheaval and the changes wrough by R is true that these narratives were naccurate throughout, and that a chart with which they were embellished showed new reef at the opposite side of the arbor from the point where a line of coks has been raised, and that the cuts of the harbor before and after the upheaval resemble the Mojave Desert; sut such slight discrepancies as these frould not be permitted to detract from the credit due a meritorious literary prowastics. all this beautiful chain, with their traordinary scientific interest and their yetical history.
Cuyler's Harbor, the scene of these rearkable disturbances, is the main port the island, a crescent-shaped indentance in her northern shore, some two ites across at its mouth, but partially ocked by Prince's Island, a rocky promitory a third of a mile long, which inscepts the view of the mariner entering it he regular course through the westerned right-hand channel, so that the port uppears almost land-locked. It is survunded by mountainous heights, with ily a short strip of sandy beach bared at w water, and the newcomer is puzzled make out how any habitation is to be ached, for these hills are, for the most str. composed of barren ledges of mamoth sand-dunes, and where the steep ilside is at one point clothed with vegetion it is apparently inaccessible and stitute of any signs of settlement. The island is used for a sheep and catsfarge, and Capt. Waters, the resident opprietor, lives in a cheerful ranch-house the head of a small canyon, a mile back om the shore, and 600 feet above it. The ly practical method of surmounting these lights is by sledge, as the constantly-instant's rest after taking the severe rade on a run.

It is a long, rough journey from the ouse to the harbor, and no one cares to ske it without an object in view. Therepre, on Sunday, the 10th of March, Capt. Vaters strolled leisurely out upon the igh mesa overlooking the harbor, to weep the horizon with his glass for some igns of his slotp, the Liberty, which had aken a load of sheep to the mainland ome days before and was due on her rearn trip. Leisurely turning the glass pon the harbor shore he was startled at what he beheld there. The captain was alone upon the island with a ranch land, a man named Harland, and the later's wife. A few minutes later these ind there's a fog er mist there, or my eyes leceive me."

In a few minutes Harland returned, nuch excited, declaring that there had een a monstrous landsilde at the southwest curve of the harbor.

Together the two visited the place, and what they witnessed has been more than crified by your cerrespondent.

Previous to this occurrence, as old phoographs and the testimony of dozens of cliable witnesses prove, the southwest urve of the harbor was a perfect crestent in form, with a narrow strip of sandy each lapped by a light surf, where boats were accustomed to land. At its southwestern extremity the heights above drop n almost precipitous ledges to the water's western extremity the heights above drop n almost precipitous ledges to the water's water and some bygone period been pitched n almost vertical lines, meeting in sharp angles and forming a series of deep caverns at the water's edge. Adjoining this overn-ledge on the south was a sand hill have hundred feet high, falling off charply at the beach and constantly raining sand bolow. So that the mouths of these awerns were alternately blocked have been and constantly raining sand but the beach and constantly raining sand the sand but the b

In front of the boathouse, where the tide formerly lapped the shore, there is now a bluff of sand and stone and coarse gravel extending out into the harbor for more than three hundred feet and joining the shore for more than a thousand feet, its greatest width being in the center, where it riess to a height of sixty feet. This bluff was originally much higher, and it was at one time four hundred feet in width; but soaking rains and the wash of beavy seas have caused it to settle and have encroached upon its base. At its foot are thousands of tons of rock and stone, varying in size from waterworn pebbles as large as a child's head, and freshly-splintered fragments of rock, to enormous boulders weighing many tons. The largest of these rocks is nearly seventy feet in circumference at the water's edge, and raises its jagged head full twenty feet above at high tide. Along the face of this newly-formed bluff is a ledge of slaty rock, pitching inward at an angle of 85 deg.

When I first looked upon this bluff and surveyed its surroundings, and especially the great field of shifting sand extending up the hilliside for hundreds of feet above it, I will confess that I had a momentary misgiving. It seemed quite within the bounds of possibility that a great landsilde of soil and sand and even a substratum of fielde rock might have come down from the hills above, where there has, as a matter of fact, been a great slip and loss simultaneously with this occurrence. With this thought in view. I made a searching inspection of the entire field, and here are the discoveries that put any such theory to flight, and which conclusively prove that the entire bluff was violently cast up from the hurbor's bed.

Throughout the crevices which form a portion of the bluff's face and extend conclusively prove that the entire bluff was violently cast up from the harbor's bed.

Throughout the crevices which form a portion of the bluff's face and extend from its base to its summit, any quantity of little marine shell-fish were found purifying, having died through removal from their native element. The face of this ledge is smeared with blue clay from the harbor bed. Similar shells, together with numerous mussels and oysters, I found in the crevices and hollows of the immense rock which marks the outer point of the newly-formed reef. These, too, were putrid, but on the day that the bluff was first seen the oysters were fresh and succulent, and furnished a delicious meal for the occupants of the ranch-house. Attached to the base of this great rock, on one side, is an enormous mass of the blue water clay before referred to, which is very sticky and tenacious. This is wearing away but slowly with the water's action, but it cannot be many days before it will have entirely disappeared. The entire upper surface of this bluff is strewn with marine life. Seeweeds, hermit crabs, clams, mussels, and a pretty little purplish spiral univalve, which is very popular in Santa Barbara, and is only found in November and December, by digging in a crust which to some extent held together and resisted the downward rush of the subsoil, although its countless scars tell of the fierce struggle it had with the mighty force. It is probable that this downward rush of the hill was the chief agency in the elevation of the little boatdownward rush of the hill was the chief agency in the elevation of the little boat-house, as the quick pressure of so great a body, when first checked, would naturally have an expansive tendency, and in this case the only direction in which it could find relief would be upwards. Several curious coincidences will attract the attention of men of science. On the 9th of March, simultaneously with the beginning of these disturbances in Cuyler's Harbor, the Mexican volcano Orizaba burst into violent eruption. On the same date four otter hunters, left alone on San parator, the Mexican volcano Orizaba burst into violent eruption. On the same date four otter hunters, left elone on San Nicholas Island, the southernmost of the channel chain, felt a violent shock of earthquake. Now comes the tidings that on this same 9th of March the volcano Ruapehu, situated near Auckland, New Zealand, without the slightest warning, belened forth steam and ashes. Further news from these distant points will be looked for with interest, with a view to making comparisons regarding subsequent demonstrations at San Miguel. There is no doubt in the minds of those who beheld the extraordinary condition of the sloop Liberty, wrecked on the morning of the 30th of March in Cuyler's Harbor, that she was sent adrift from her anchorage by some tremendous submarine disthe 30th of March in Cuyler's Harbor, that she was sent adrift from her anchorage by some tremendous submarine disturbance. This view has been confirmed by the experience of the schooner Arcadia, belonging to Capt. Ellis of Santa Barbara, which ran over to San Miguel of rescue the Times correspondent, arriving there on the morning of the 3d of April. That night, while lying at anohor in the usual place, her men were called on deck by a sudden violent shock, and hastened on deck to find the water suddenly boil up around the schooner in a frightful and unaccountable manner, while the heavy anchor began to drag. The captain, an old Norwegian sallor, accustomed to the perils of the stormy Baltic Sea, did not lose a moment in getting out of the harbor, leaving his anchor behind attached to a buoy. On this occasion the soundings made showed a deepening of one fathom in a bed of solid bedrock, in the space of one week, and a deepening of three fathoms in all since the beginning of these convulsions.

The Coast Survey will soon send down a government party to determine the exact changes that have taken place in Cuyler's Harbor, and we shall then expect to have a scientific explanation of their nature and causes, together with some forecast of what future developments may be anticipated.

WOMEN

Dr. Edison's FAMOUS PILLS AND BANDS and OBESITY FRUIT SALT reduce your weight without dieting; cures the causes of obesity, such as dyspepsia, rheumatism, nervousness, catarrh, kidney troubles; keeps you healthy and beautifies the complexion. Miss Myrtle Lee Soule, the bright, brainy and active advocate of universal language of all nations, organizer of ladies' clubs for improvement in conversation, recently wrote a letter of praise concerning Dr. Edison's treatment for obesity, as follows:

Gentlemen: It is now six months since I used your wonderful Obesity Pills and Obesity Band for the reduction of obesity. The pills reduced my weight about thirty pounds in seven weeks and brought a perfect cure from chronic dyspepsia and stomach troubles. Then I wore Dr. Edison's Improved Obesity Band, which further reduced my weight twenty-three pounds and my abdominal measurement nine inches. It is a splendid support and absolutely indispensable to a fleshy woman.

No spring medicines required when Obesity Pilis and Salt are used.

Miss Susan Morey Johnson, one of the most prominent club women of Los Angeles, president of the California Daughters Club, which organization is composed of representative Los Angeles women, in society and in the circles of art, literature, music and the sciences is not afraid to write a few words of testimony in favor of Dr. Edison's Obesity remedies. She says:

"I have a good report to make on Dr. Edison's Obesity remedies. She says:

"I have a good report to make on Dr. Edison's Obesity Pills and Fruit Salt. Before taking them I was regarded as an invalid. I had to remain indoors, could not walk a block away from my home—internal fat oppressed me terribly—I had been told of so many wonderful cures by your Obesity Pills that I concluded to try them. The first bottle relieved my heavy breathing, made walking or any exertion less painful. I suffered much less from dyspepsia and stomach trouble, but my weight was not reduced more than five pounds.

"The second bottle produced a dyspepsia and stomach trouble, but my weight was not reduced more than five pounds.

"The second bottle produced a greater change. The troubles gradually lessened—I began to feel more like my former self. The rolls of fat over my abdomen grew smaller; at the end of the third bottle I was almost well. The scales showed that I had lost over thirty-one pounds. I then used three bottles of Dr. Edison's marvelous Fruit Salt and improved fast, and was soon entirely well and free from the dangerous fat. I had a better skin and complexion and lest over twenty-three pounds more, making a total loss of about fifty-five pounds of extra fat, leaving solid, healthy flesh. It is a grand treatment for the unfortunate victims of extreme obesity."

State of Illinois, Soldiers and Orphans' Home, 514 East Capitol avenue, H. R. Mitchell, clerk.—Springfield, Ill., January 16, 1894: A year ago I bought one of your Obesity Bands and wore it with good effect and a great deal of comfort, reducing my abdominal creumference seven inches. Now I want comfort, reducing my abdominal circumference seven inches. Now I want another band made as per dimensions inclosed. I am willing you should publish my opinion of your Band.

The Obesity Fruit Salt is used in connection with the Pills and Bands or both. One tesspoonful in a tumbler of both. One teaspoonful in a tumbler of water makes a delicious soda. THE PRICE IS $1 PER BOTTLE.

THE PRICE IS $1 PER BOTTLE.

Measurement for Band is the largest part of the abdomen. Measure snug at figures 1, 2, 3. The Bands cost $2.50 each for any length up to 36 inches, but for one larger than 36 inches add 10 cents for each additional inch.

Pills $1.50 a bottle, or three bottles for $4, enough for one treatment.

furnish them?"

"Oh, poor papa, poor papa," wept Molly.
"It would have been harder for him than

But Bella made no reply. She sat with her fair check resting on her hand and a dewy flood of recollection in her great blue eyes. She knew who it was that had been her father's confidant and consoler and nurse and friend, while the other girls were dancing and firting and making merry; and she knew now that the heedless luxury-loving girls, ignorant of the world, of business, of the first principles of life, had only herself to look to as soon as their little hard was gone.

"Good for nothing," said Bella. "Not coe of them would buy our cold cream. Professionals by the multitude do everything we can do, and do it all a great deal better."

"Oh, Bella!" the others cried in chorus, the tears pouring over their pretty faces, what are we going to do?"

"I fancy." said Bella, laughing and embracing them both together, "that you are going to do nothing but help me out by keeping the house for me. But I am going to work. What I said just now about the cold cream gave me an idea."

"What—what sort of an idea?" stammered Molly.

"Well, you shall see."

It was a week afterward that Bella came to the two girls with something in her hand, a little white saith box, and as she opened it, and then the inner wrapping of silver tissue paper, she disclosed a cake of pearly-white soap exactly fitting the box. "That is what I am going to do."

the box. "That is what I am going do," she said.
"I—I don't understand," said Molly.
"I am going to make soap."
The girls were too aghast to speak.
"I have a lot of grandmamma's recipes. I shall make soap, of the fin recipes. I shall make soap, of the finest, toilet wasters, colognes, rose pearls, aromatic vinegar. I shall put them up in the daintiest style. The creditors are going to let us stay on in the house one year. By that time I shall be able to rent it. We shall use these parlors for sales-rooms, and I am going out now to speak to Mirs. Dessenerly, who I know will talk us up through the whole city and outlying territory. Our things will become the fashion."

to Mrs. Dessenerly, who I know will talk us up through the whole city and outlying territory. Our things will become the fashion."

"Oh! oh oh!" cried the two girls, falling on each other's necks and weeping to break their hearts. "Soap boliers!"

"I'm sorry you're eshemed of me." said Bella demurely. "But if you don't like it you needn't appear, although I think it would bring us a great trade of curiosity, for a time, at any rate, if you did. I am so many years older than you, it doesn't matter for me. I shall be 20 in a day or two. By the time you are 20 we shall have made a little fortune, and then we can go away and spend it where no one knows us, in the South of Europe, in the north of Africa, in the west of America."

"A fortune made in soap—and not by your grandfather, but my ourselves! Oh, Bella, Bella French, I should think papa and mamma would turn over in their graves to think of you! And what in the world will Rolland Tascot—"

"We won't talk of those things." said Bella, with dignity. "The moment you have any better idea we will act upon it. But now my cologne water is digesting and all my other brews are under way in the kitchen and laundry, and I'm going out to see Mrs. Dessenerly."

To the amazement of Nina and Molly, when Bella came back Mrs. Dessenerly."

To the amazement of Nina and Molly, when Bella came back Mrs. Dessenerly oame back with her, and, gathering up her superb robes, without seeing the girls, she descended to the lower regions and began to inspect Bella's work.

"You are sure of your recipes, my love?" she said.

"Oh, perfectly," answered Bella. "They are grandmamma's, and I don't know how many generations before her—old still-room secrets when the family were still at home in the old Devonshire house. "I've made the cologne just as the rules mays, with angelica root, and sweet flag, and cassia wood, with eamphor and cloves and thyme and orange flowers and invender, rose leaves and violeits and mint, and have brussed them all together in rectified spirits, stirring and stirring

"My dear, it is a whole garden of flowers."

"And there," said Bella, "there is the angel water, for fine ladies to use in their baths by the quantity, made with rose water and orangs water and myrtle water, and a little scrap of ambergris, and a little scrap of ambergris, and a little scrap of ambergris, and a little dust of musk. I have had Peter shake it for hours in a warm room, and then shake it again a day long, and I have decanted and filtered it—"

"It will make their bodies feel like Venus rising from the foam," said Mrs. Dessenerly.

"And then there are the rose pearls. I made them with poor Peter's help, beating a heap of petals in a mortar till they were a black paste, and dropping in attat of roses, drop by drop; and then Peter rolled them in his old black palms, and I marked each with four dents before they hardened, and there they are to perfume the fine ladies' laces."

"Admirable, my dear, admirable."

"And the vinlagre alromatique—isn't that pungant? It is a glacial acette acid, and rushed camphor, and oil of cloves and rosemary and begramet and lavender and chanamon and pimerto, with a trifle of neroil, all rocked and shaken until the camphor is quite dissolved, and it will charm away nervous headaches and a chousand other ills."

"I must have some of it. It always did cure my megrims. But how did you manage the soap?"

"Oh, Peter bought the palm oil and the soda for me, and we boiled them together. And we made another with oilve oil and suct and soda, and when they had hardened we shredded them with some white curd soap, and melted some in a water bath with essence of orris root for a violet soap, and some with all the fragrant oils for moroling dew soap, and we poured it all in these little square moulds, and when they here a genius, Bella, my love!"

the creditors didn't take them."

them in the drawing-rooms, and you are going to be there to soil them; Peter will be down here preparing them. Who is going to carry them home? For your customers will not, you know."
"We will," said Nina end Molly, looking in the door.
"What a noble family!" said the great lady. "If all the girls in America were like you, it would be a different world here!" And she swept them all into her ample arms. "And now," she said, "you must all come home and dine with me."
But Bella said that would not be best. Mrs. Dessenerly might be a saint on earth, but other people were not, and what was today kindness tomorrow might be scant courtesy; it was inevitable that they would be made to feel their position, and they had best accept it at the start. You would not heen they had best accept it at the start. You would not have thought, however, that there was anything of the sort to accept had you been in the French drawing-room a few weeks later. All the old elegance of the place was in evidence—the mossy rugs, the soft gloom, the rich hangings, the pletures, the baubles, the deep lounges. Only on the tables and consoles lay the little pomade jars, the glass colognes, the boxes of the rose pearls. A pretty maid in a coquettish cap and muslin gown ushered in the deep lounges. Only on the tables and consoles lay the little pomade jars, the glass colognes, the boxes of the rose pearls. A pretty maid in a coquettish cap and muslin gown ushered in the guests; Bella herself received them, Mrs. Dessenerly upholding her the first few days. Another maid passed a claret cup. Who would have guessed these maids were Nina and Molly with their curls brushed out of sight and bound away beneath their caps, and their ruffled muslin aprons wrapping them to the chin?

As for Bella, she was as gracious, as gentle, as elegant, meeting ail her old acquaintances as if nothing had happened, showing her samples, taking their orders, sending their vinaigrettes to be filled, as is she were simply doing the kindness and courtesies of her own house to visitors.

Of course there was presently no suchplace of rendezvous as Bella French's parlors. There fine ladies met one another place of rendezvous as Bella French's par-lors. There fine ladies met one another and their gallants, and there they made their purchases at great prices, feeling they had something nicer than could be had unless Bella had some connection with the toilet people of kings and queens

And there one day Roland Tascot had the assurance to come in the train of some great dame and to ignore the girl whose heart he had been on the point of claiming before the crash of her father's failure ing before the crash of her father's failure came.

When, at the end of a year, Bella added up her books and struck off her balance, she had already cleared enough to send the girls abroad, and to hire maids in their places, to give her courage to enter on broader phases of her enterprise and to feel that half a dozen more of years of such success would restore to her her father's house and give her sufficient money to maintain it.

Whether owing to herself or to Mrs. Dessenerly's determination, Bella could still have maintained her place in society, had she chosen; but although she was never quite left out, she made her life a quiet if a busy one.

And before long there came a day when, through the dishonesty of debtors, the ruin of a railroad and unfortunate speculations of his own, Roland Tascot found himself penniless, and Bella had the satisfaction, if that it could be called, to her who cared nothing for him other than he was one of her kind, of giving him a situation as her bookkeeper, where every day, as he saw her pretty fortune rolling up, he had the opportunity of gnashing his teeth and wondering at his folly.

You think of merry, tinkling bells,
Of music low in fairy dells,
Or sweetest notes that e'er were heard
From touch of lute or throat of bird,
When Polly laughs.

II. When Polly laughs,
All life seems bright and gay,
And thoughts of care are chased away,
While softly o'er your heart doth steal
The gladness of that merry peal,

The aunlight of a soul shines through
Her lovely eyes of azure blue.
May joy be still the sweetest part
Of that blithe carol from her heart,
When Polly laughs.

The echoes linger on the air—
Elusive, yet thrilling everywhere—
While oft in memory's halls you hear
The music ringing, sweet and clear,
Of Polly's laugh.

TEN-MINUTE EXERCISES.

The rules for health and beauty are really very simple. Rise a half hour be-fore breakfast, open the window, whatever the weather or season, and go briskly through the ordinary calisthenic exercises with the arms and legs and body, for ten minutes; no longer, for the half-hour of

After the exercise a cold sponge bath should be taken, accompanied by vigorous rubbing, and every other week a cupful of common salt should be thrown into the water each day, and when this is used it must be remembered that soap cannot be used, as the two do not agree.

CLEARING A HOUSE OF INSECTS How to Successfully Fight Water Bugs, Moths, Etc.

[From a Special Contributor.] In the spring there is a wholesale resur-rection of domesticated insects that fill a housekeeper's mind with forebodings. Furnace fires have not only kept the housekeeper's mind with forebodings.

Furnace fires have not only kept the family warm all winter, but also innumerable coay mice nests, the larvae of moths and the irrepressible cockroach. At the first warm sunshiny day every one of these small abominations are up and doing unless a strong hand of resistance is put forth at their first active demonstration.

This is accompanied by using naptha and benzine liberally on mattresses, pillows, etc., that are sunning in the back yard.

It is not too extravagant to pour a little stream of naptha all about bindings and tuttings of ticking, since it is found that this is almost the only agent that not only kills vermin but destroys their eggs.

For the woodwork of the beds first wash all the unvarnished parts in scalding soap suds, then immediately pass over every joint and crack with a clean old paint brush dipped in naptha. Where during the winter a bed has been used by a sick person it is a nice precaution to paint the under parts with prepared chloride of lime and then push it near a draught of fresh air and swnny window to stand for at least five hours. Careful housekeepers paint carpet, washboard and picture moiding under and above where every bed stands with naptha and at intervals of two weeks repeat the operation.

Where a movable wooden washstand becomes infested with croton bugs of cockroaches, there is a sovereign cure in washing it out with hot suds, leaving it open to dry in strong sunlight and then socking every joint of the wood with pure ammonia. To guard against any return to the old haunt cut a few squares of stiff brown wrapping paper, paint them lightly with muchage, dust over heavily with borar and lay squares in the drawers and cabinet. Any stationary washstand can be kept clear of them by pouring a few teaspoonfuls of chloride of lime or sublimate down the waste pipe twice or thrice a week and using borar in the lower part of the stand.

Where a bathroom is infested with croton bugs only repeated use of sulphur candle can stop their multiplication. These are bought at any apothecary's or grocer's, and bear on them careful directions for use.

are bought at any apothecary's or groosy's, and bear on them careful directions for use.

For moths there has at last been found a pleasant preventive. If a florist cannot supply one with sprays of dried English lavender the corner apothecary will be sure to keep it in packages; when on closet shelves, in drawers and trunks it will defend one's woolen things against the most aggressive onslaughts of the enemy. As one by one the draperies come down dust, sun and fold them up with squares of tarmoth paper and directly the furnace fire is put out send for an expert rat-catcher to examine the walls and cellar for those most offensive of parasites, mice, that breed vermin of all kinds. If it is a country house order him to send ferrets through the walls, but in the city insist on traps and forbid any use of poison, else the creatures will die in the walls and render the house unlivable. After three days experiment he should have coaxed every mouse from his nest, and the $5 or $6 he asks for his work is well invested. Where a rat-catcher cannot be had buy a half dozen round tin traps and set them all every night for a week in every suspected spot, baiting each time with a different dainty and scalding the traps to clean them in the morning.

PRACTICAL FRENCH COOKING. A Cheap and Appetizing April Din-ner Menu.

By Mrs. Will H. Low, an eminer upon the art of French cooking. 1895, by Mrs. Will H. Low.) AN APRIL MENU. Vermicelli Soup.

Boiled Salmon with Hollandaise Sauce.

One small handful vermicelli.
Crush the vermicelli lightly in your hand and put it in the bouillon, when it boils stir for a minute or two, and let it cook slowly for twenty minutes. The finest vermicelli is the finest. BOILED SALMON.

Salmon is at its best from the 1st of April until the end of July. The freshness of fish can be distinguished by the brilliancy of the skin and bloody gills and eyes. If the skin and eyes are dull the fish is not fresh. Highly-colored salmon is the best. Whitish flesh denotes inferior is the best. Whitish fiesh denotes inferior quality.

The water in which fish is boiled and to which ingredients are added is called in French a court-bouillon.

Wash the fish and put it in a vessel with sufficient cold water to cover it; then throw in sait, pepper, bay leaves, thyme, vinegar, onions shaved in round this slices, and carrots cut in the same way. It must be brought to the boiling point slowly. After cooking for sight or ten minutes, strain the water and serve on a folded napkin; trim with parsley and slices of lemon, with the following sauce:

HOLLANDAISE SAUCE. One-quarter of a pound of butter Yolks of two eggs. Half a lemon

A pinch of sait.

A small pinch of pepper.

Cook in a bain marie, as it is most important to preserve an even temperature. If the water becomes too warm it will cook the eggs and turn the sauce. Put the eggs into the small saucepan, and add, one at a time, small parcals of outter the size of a filbert. Siir constantly with a wooden spoon. It will thicken like a mayonnaise made with oil, and, indeed, this real Hollandaise sauce is nothing but a warm mayonnaise where the oil is replaced by butter. When the butter is all in add the salt and pepper, and squeeze in the juice of a lemon, still stirring until it is all well mixed, serve with the fish.

PRESERVED PEAS WITH BUTTER. A pinch of salt.

PRESERVED PEAS WITH BUTTER. One pint of peas. Butter the size of a small egg

A pinch of sait.

A pinch of pepper.

In France fresh peas are sold already shelled. The dealer, through different-sized selves, sifts the varying grades often found in the same shell. The largest are cheapest, the medium size a trifle dearer, and the smallest bring the highest dearer, and the sinkings with the price.

Throw the peas in a strainer, set in the sink and pour over them two or three quarts of boiling water. Have the butter in a small china or granite vessel, and when the peas are well strained put them in with it. Then set the vessel in a larger one containing warm water and leave it one containing warm water and leave it in it until the butter is well melted. Jump the peas once or twice, in order to mix the butter thorughly with them. Do not let the water get too hot, as the butter will cook and turn to oil, instead of being creamy. Serve as soon as the butter is

GREEN SALAD. One pint field salad. One dozen sprigs of cherville. Four or five targon leaves.

One pint field salad.
One dozen sprigs of cherville.
Four or five targon leaves.
Ten chives.
One beet, medium size.
Four spoonfuls of oil.
One small spoonful of vinegar.
One-half teaspoonful of salt.
A pinch of pepper.
French people are so fond of salad that their dinner is almost invariably accompanied by one.
The mixture of cherville (in French cerfeuil,) targon and chives is a great addition to all salads. A most delicious flavor. The chives and targon are well enough known, but not the chervilles, which is a small plant, very much like pareley, but having an entirely different flavor. The leaves are very fine, and they are of a more delicate shade of green. It can be found at all big markets, However, cherville can be raised easily in the back yard or even in a wooden box. It does not like too much sun.
Beets require to be cooked a long time, five or six hours. The leaves should be cut off, and the roots washed and put in boiling water, with enough to cover them. If it evaporates during the process of cooking it must be replaced by boiling water. When cooked, take them out of the water, let them cool, peel them, and cut them in thin alloes.

Green salads should be well shaken, either in a cloth or in a wire basket woven expressly for this purpose. The process of salad shaking is very necessary, for if water remains in it, oil used in the dressing cannot mix, but roils itself in large drops which impart a greasy taste, no matter how good the oil may be. Put the leaves in a bowl, with the cut heets on top for ornament, and then spread over the mixture of chives, targon and cherville washed and chopped previously. Put the salt, pepper and vinegar in the salad spoon, and mix well with the fork When the sait and pepper are melted, spread the vinegar over the salad and then the oil. With fork and spoon stir diligently for at least five minutes and serve.

THE INTRODUCTION OF MAN-CHURIA JEWELBY.

The Tunic, China Lace and Jade green are the Results for the Women of War in the Orient.

To begin with, we were tired to death of everything Japanese. Fams and para-sols and screens and lacquer had become sols and screens and lacquer had become a weariness, and the kimone a burden. The Japanese had dumped so much waste upon us that even our large capacity for purchasing trivialities had been exhausted. The Chinese have never troubled themselves to sell us anything but tes, so what comes to us from there now is not merely manufactured to catch the eye, but are the real things they have worn and used themselves. For there has been a terrible breaking up of everything in China since the war began. Though the Japanese have behaved wonderfully well, it is impossible fôr an army to occupy a country without a prodigious lot of loot falling into its hands, one way or another. Families have been swept away or have fied from their homes and all their goods scattered to the four winds. Ruin and distress have forced others to sell their luxuries, and the spoil of this great revolution has been puring into Europe and America by the shipload.

A NEW GARMENT FOR WOMEN.
One of the prettiest of these new fances is the use of the Chinese tunic, that loose, wide-steeved garment that falls to the knee as part of a morning or tea gown combined with the eternal and ubiquitous chiffon. The Princess de Sagan has two of these. One is a loose sip of white slik covered with white chiffon. The sleeves are close-fitting to the waist, and at the neck is a great frill of lace held in place with half a dozen turquoise pins. Over the whole is slipped a timic such as is worn by the great court sadies of the flowery kingdom. This is of paie green silk embroidered in blue flowers of that curious shade of blue that comes only from China; the embroidery so close that the flowers give almost the impression of shaded blue scales overlapping each other. The edge is finished with a narrow border of black satin and a line of gold thread, and this negligee has a most rich and bizarre effect of color. The other tea gown has the nilk and chiffon and understip of dull soft pink, the tunic being of black satin embroidered in gold, and that clear shade of red that the Chinese called dragon's blood.

ORIENTAL JEWELS.

The jewis worn with it are of the beau-tiful parrot-blue enamel on silver, for which Manchu jewelers are famous. There is one of the blue dragon fly-pins in the hair; a great earring turned into a brooch classe the fluilly ruffles at the throat brooch clasps the fluffy ruffles at the throat and at the belt hangs one of the chute-taines of which Chinese ladies are so fond, including the moon-eyed perfume box, the flexible sacred fish and tiny images of the God of Heavens, and the God of Happy Fortunes, besides the little invocation to good luck cut out in gold which no Chinese woman is ever without, if she can possibly help it.

This Manchuria jewelry has already ap-peared in New York and has been seized upon with avidity as a Jeligniful new adpeared in New York and has been seized upon with avidity as a delignitul new addition to the rich woman's jouallerie de fantasi—as the Parisians call the ornaments which change with the fashions. Frederic Villiers, the war correspondent, who has just returned from the seat of hostilities, has brought a beautiful collection of bracelets, pins, buckles, ear-rings, hair ornaments, chatelaines, lockets and rings of the most delicate and fantastic gold cut-work, silver, silver-gilt and blue and green enamels on silver and gold. The earrings are far too big for American ears, but would make rather splendid brooches and one very up-to-date woman appeared at the first night of "The Ideal Husband" in a wide skirt of new black moire satin, a bodice of white chiffon and lace and a long fronted Eton jacket of stem green silk, with buttons made of old blue evamel Manchu buttons. Her bonnet was a knot of black tulle drawn through a blue Manchu beit buckle and had an upstanding cluster of tiny ostrich tips, two green and one black.

Beside the dress and ornaments the crise de chine, as the French fashion papers dub the new manla, shows itself in squares of heavy yellow Chinese lace that serve as doylies under finger bowls, in the strips of sleeve embroideries that are used to spread on the mantel-pleces, in the Still another manifestation is that the two fashionable new tints are jade-green and Manchu blue. E. B.

SEVEN HANDED EUCHRE CLUBS

[From a Special Contributor.] From a special Contributor.

For pleasure pure and simple seven-handed ouchre clubs, epidemic at time of writing, may be cited as models. Their sessions are held at night and do not debar men. The presence of husbands, nay even the unattached of the sterner sex, assures their popularity. These men, it is said, play an entirely unsentimental game that jars against the finer sensibilities of their sweethearts and wives, who are governed solely by etiquette and consideration for one another's feelings.

But, ces messieurs, fresh from Wall street and the law courts, where they have been engaged all day in the exciting game of hustle-and-get-ahead-of-the-other-fellow, been engaged all day in the exciting game of hustle-and-get-ahead-of-the-other-fellow, play to win.

The game is played with a full pack of cards, and the joker is dealt, seven to each player, giving first three and then four, and leaving four on the table. This quartette is dubbed "the widow."

The player on the left of the dealer makes the first bid of 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 or 7 tricks, naming the suit, the highest bid getting it. The bidding is done in turn. The person who secures the bid then selects three other players, partners, thus pitting four against three. If the biddor wins he and his partners each count the amount bid. If he fails, he is euchred, and the three opponents count, each, the amount bid. While one can play a quiet, steady game, taking no risks, and, holding high cards or the joker, play for a euchre, the spirit of extreme feminine politieness engendered by this fad of the hour requires that a person holding the joker should bid the limit, seven, thereby always introducing an element of chance in the contest and giving each one more show.

Prizes are played for. A certain number of points gained can be the limit or a given period, of time as agreed upon. The one holding the highest number of points at the decisive moment wins.

SHOOTING BY EYE-LIGHT.

THE OLD-TIME HUNTING BOW IN A BOY'S HANDS.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON,

When you are overtaken by night in a Southern swamp and there is no moon you may as well stop short and make the most of it. This is what we did upon the most of it. This is what we did upon the occasion I am now writing about. We had not the slightest chance of finding our way out before morning, as we well knew, so we felt blindly about until we found a moderately dry tussock where we held a council of war in a most disconsistent most of the consistent most of the cons will lighted a match, but there was no Will lighted a match, but there was no fuel, not even dry leaves, to be had. The most that we could do was to sit down side by side between two large cypress trees and wish for daylight to come. "Joup will be scared to death," Will suggested, and I felt him shrug his shoul-suggested, and I felt him shrug his shoulders.

"Yes," I assented, "he'll cover up his head with a blanket and fancy that every breath of air is a ghost."

Joup was, indeed, a very superstitious negro, and when we left him to take care of the tamp we had no thought of being absent longer than two hours; still less did we think of any occurrence that could possibly make us afraid; and yet we had been sitting there in the darkness not more than half an hour when a ahuffling sound and a low, harsh growl came from a little distance in front of us.

Will grasped my arm and whispered:

"What was that?"

The growl changed to a sharp nasal animng whine, and at the same time I saw two oval spots, singularly steady and luminous, shining like fire opals through the gloom.

"Sowe larve animal." I replied, get-saw two oval spots, singularly seasy amuluminous, shining like fire opals through the gloom.

"Some large animal," I replied, getting my bow ready and fumbling for a heavy arrow. It was nervous.

We had often before been in danger, but the frequency of dangerous apparitions does not take away their power to frighten one. I felt a peculiar chill crawl up my back. We had been told that in this region bears and panthers were often met with, as well as a smaller species of wildcat, and that wolves were plentiful in some regions.

Whatever this animal now before us was it certainly could stare with a very steady gaze; its eyes were as motionless, as two stars. I looked hard to try to make out the outlines of its form; but although it seemed to me that I saw very dimly a large bulk behind the eyes, I could not be sure.

"What shall we do?" Will asked it seemed to me that I saw very dimiy a large bulk behind the eyes, I could not be sure.

"What shall we do?" Will asked.

"Be still a moment," I whispered. Another prolonged, husky growl and then the eyes suddenly disappeared. All was still for some minutes, during which I heard nothing but Will's breathing and the quick thumping of my own heart. You may talk about bravery and courage and all that; but I say from experience that it will try the best herves in the world to be subjected to what we were just then undergoing.

Put yourself in the same place and imagine what you would do. There we were in the midst of a wild swamp at least a hundred miles from any settlement; for in those days Southern Florida was not what it now is, and we were really but boys, good, tall, strong ones, to be sure; still only boys, and armed with nothing more effective than bows and arrows. If a savage bear or a panther should rush upon us we could do very little in self-defense with these light weapons.

We realized the situation perfectly; but to say the truth we were not scared out of our good sense. We nerved ourselves, and listened; we had not heard the thing go away, and I felt sure that it was still there. I say that I was now not very nervous, but I recollect wishing fervently that I had taken my father's good advice and had not ventured so far away from where my uncle's schooner lay in Berkeley's Cove on the coast. The very last words that my uncle said to me were:

"Well, if you will go don't blame me when you get into bad trouble."

I did not blame him; but I wished that I had considered his warnings with more seriousness.

Not much time was left for reflection and regret, however, for another snarline.

Not much time was left for reflection and regret, however, for another snarling whine or yelp, this time from behind us, made us turn about right suddenly. Soon enough we knew by certain sounds that two or three, perhaps more, animals were circling around us a little way out in the darkness.

two or three, perhaps more, animals were circling around us a little way out in the darkness.

Will, who was always ready with experiments and anxious to investigate, struck another match and set fire to an envelope or piece of letter that he found in his pocket. The sudden blaze fiashed a dim light around us and I saw two large forms scamper away. Of course the flame lasted but a few seconds, leaving the darkness apparently denser than ever.

We now had quite a space of silence; but when I had begun to hope that the fire had frightened our visitors quite away, back they came and closer to us than they had yet been. Meantime the sky was cleared of a haze that had dimmed it and a legion of Southern stars winked down through the rifts overhead.

"I see something," whispered Will; "It looks like a big dog."

The increase of light, though very small, did indeed bring out very dimly the skulking forms of three or four large animals, and as they circled around us they appeared to be getting closer.

I was frightened, I suppose, but I meant to be game to the last.

"I am going to let drive at them," I

I was frightened, I suppose, but I meant to be game to the last.

"I am going to let drive at them," I said to Will. "Get ready."

He made no reply, but I knew by certain movements that he meant to shoot when I should.

I rone to my feet, fixing a heavy stell-pointed arrow on my bow-string and making ready to draw. Will did the same; but like unsubstantial shadows the animals disappeared. We stood and waited. Out in the swamp we heard them splash the water as they waiked or trotted along. Some big owis hooted far off.

guard all approaches. Suddenly Will's bow recoited, and I heard his arrow whis like a spinning top. Whack! In struck a tree, I knew by the sound.

At nearly the same time I let go a shaft at one of the filting forms. My aim taken by guess in the dark, was good enough. Such a rancous, ocugh-like cry of rage and pain I never before had heard. The animal was hard hit I well knew and now the real danger was upon us. Will let drive again. I saw two or three of the animals rush together, as if preparing to charge us in a body, and I began to let arrows fly into the group one after an other as fast as I could shoot.

There is no exhilaration like the spirit of fright; all thought of danger vanishes the moment that you take in a full draught of battle energy. Will and I no longer calculated chances or anticipated personal in jury; every impulse moving us was a desire to kill. We drew each arrow to the head and sent it with the full force of our strong weapons. And we hit perhaps a often as we missed, dark as it was. Such a noise, such a scrambling, such a spiash ing! We gave them all of our heavy arrows and then began with the light one. It took far less time to do what I as telling than it takes to write it. The and telling than it takes to write it. The ani mais evidently were great cowards, or fel over-matched and could not bear the pun ishment we were giving them. The; snapped their teeth, snarled, whine hoarsely and tore around like mad; the ail at once they broke away through the swamp, and we heard them going further and further, until the noise died out the distance.

The curious part of it is that we never the distance of the term of the distance. The curious part of it is that we never did find out for certain what sort of ani mais our visitors were. When dayligh came we found plenty of their tracks; but the nature of the soil was such that the impressions were indefinite in outline. Sit of our arrows we could not find, and we took it as certain that they were borne of in the flesh of our defeated antagonists which were most likely wolves.

On reaching camp we found Joup almost crazy with fright; but we still had out ducks for him to dress and cook!

Tuesday, April 16, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" will begin an engagement of five nights and Wednesday and Saturday matiness at the Los Angeles Theater, under the management of Charles Frohman.

Few modern plays have taken such a strong hold upon the theater-going public as "The Girl I Left Behind Me." It appeals to participant to one's admiration.

saving now upon the measure guing putting as "The Girl I Left Behind Me." It appeals to patriotism, to one's admiration for heroic deeds, and there is no cant, no false, mawkish sentimentality about it. All of its scenes are extremely interesting, and some of them are of absorbing and thrilling interest. The play is a revelation to one witnessing it for the first time, and it is rarely that its equal has been seen in regard to soul-stirring scenes and realistic effects, and seldom, if ever, has the third act, where all the horrors of an Indian massacre are depicted and felt without an Indian being seen, or a single melodramatic effect being used, been equalied upon the stage. This scene never gives but one impression. It fills the soul with dread of the approaching doom of the besieged garvison with its handful of United. States regulars and their families. But the "Girl I Left Behind Me." also has its humorous features. Perhaps in no other play has the ert of making lows re-But the "Girl I Left Behind Me," also has its humorous features. Perhaps in no other play has the art of making love received such exhaustive treatment. There are several different kinds of girls. The impetuous lover, whose frame thrills with emotional insanity in pronouncing the three words of his avowal is there, and so is the dilettante in love-making, who frivois away his time with female hearts until the hour of fate strikes for him, and he finds himself so enmeshed in the snares of the little blind god that he has to confess his surrender to the tender passion." The his surrender to the tender passion. "The Girl I Left Behind Me" is a play packed thrilling episodes, tenders stirring war scenes, pathos, heroics and eartment, the whole admirably inter-simpled. It is, therefore, easy to see why it changes all playgoers.

The third and great act of the play is in the stockade at Post Kennion. In the early dawn the Indians have surrounded the post, and all night their weird songs have been heard. Kate Kennion, knowing the awful fate of women falling into the Indians' hands, makes her father promise that he will shoot her when all hope is gone. At the close of the act the Indians are at the gate of the stockade. Kennion prepares to carry out his promise to his daughter. As he raises his pistol the bugie notes of the rescuing corps are heard and the soldiers rush in. Hawkesworth has done his duty. In the last act Parlow's villainy and Hawkesworth's bravery are brought to light, and the curtain falls to the sound of wedding bells.

The Burbank proposes a fitting celebration of flesta week by putting on the celebrated war drama, "The Field of Honor," or the "Blue and Gray," which is to have its first presentation here this evening. Extensive preparations have been going on for this great play for some weeks past, and we are promised the finest mibitary production ever witnessed on the local stage. There are a hundred auxiliaries to aid in its presentation, grand scenic effects, the old war songs, battle scenes made as realistic as possible, and a grand Decoration day scene as a fitting climax to a story well and graphically told. Co. C, of the National Guard forms an important part of the production, and during the week there will be special G.A.R. and military nights. The Dailey Stock Company is strongly cast, and "The Field of Honor" will doubtless prove one of the greatest attractions of the carnival week. Special matinees are to be given on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday at 2 p.m., and the evening performance on Wednesday will not commence until 9 p.m.

the farce comedy which serves to introduce Peter F. Dailey as a star, which is underlined for an early visit to this city, and lovers of rattling fun and captivating music will no doubt rejoice thereat. Mr. Dailey is described as an original comedian, and, with this single virtue, he would prove a welcome visitor, but he is also a favorite creator of the things which make people laugh, and has long held a high position in the realm of comedy. In "A Country Sport," Peter is given the widest scope for the display of his peculiar talent and varied abilities. In the company which surrounds the new star are found some very familiar and popular names. First should, perhaps, be mentioned joily May Irwin, than whom no more genuinely humorous comedienne has been seen in farce comedy. The well-known delineator of Irish character, John G. Sparks, so long prominent in the Harrigan company, and Andrew Mack, the favorite young tenor and composer of songs, are noted on the bill, as well as Miss Ada Lewis, Harrigan's famous "Tough Girl." There are a score of other merry-makers, and no doubt "A Country Sport" will prove a source of rare enjoyment.

"Our Flat," which had its initial presentation at the Los Angeles Theater last night, is one of the funniest skits ever seen on this stage. It is the story of an impecunious pair who live in a flat, having furnished it on the installment plan, with several payments overdue, and the furniture dealer, the butcher, the baker and the candiestick-maker howling for their money in one grand exultant chorus of duns. In act two the indignant and unpaid tradesman who furnishes the chairs, tables, etc., sends his men upon the scene and proceeds to cart off the household effects bodily, whereupon the young and charming mistress improvises a set of furniture out of packing boxes, bath tubs and other impediment from the cook's quarters. Lee Jarvis as Bella the servant does some playing that is captivating in its dash and abandon, and she makes a typical domestic. IN THE STUDIO.

I have run away from the city and weet atmosphere of the country ops me. The highways and byways are bordered with emerald; the lush grasses nod at me from the hill slopes and the broad, green meadows and the wild flowers are like a countess army of painters painting the earth with color, warming it with beauty and filling it with fragrance. The leaves are unfolding upon the boughs of the many trees; there is a little peep above my head, then a gen-tle twitter, and at length a full chorus of song.

The mountains make our background warm with the sunrise glow which mingles with the purple robed, fleeing shadows. Here are the great branching oaks, a century old yet green as in their youth; the whole Sierra Madre slope is carpeted with velvet grasses, among which is a gleam of gold, for the yellow daisles have hidden amid their slender spires, and the golden buttercup is playing hide-and-seek with the wandering breezes

Here, under spreading oaks upon the mountains look forever which the mountains look forever down, is the pretty Sierra Madre studio of J. G. Borglum. But what is this you see upon his easel? Ah, the mountains have stolen in and are limned upon the canvas. They speak, like those of the outer world, of vast height, sublimity and vastness. They are the alphabet of power, and the artist has caught their language and made them eloquent. On the canvas the glant oak and cedar lift themselves against the mountain sides. the giant oak and cedar lift them-selves against the mountain sides. You almost wait to catch the whisper of their leaves and the melody of the robin's song to break the stillness. It is the mountain world you see upon that easel, the same bright sky that bends above the outer world, the same bends above the outer world, the same

And there comes the babbling brook, all silver tongued and so like life you all silver tongued and so like life you fancy the water drops would cling to your fingers should you lay them upon the canvas. The horse and horseman are there too, lingering upon the brook's boulder-piled bank. The forward horse dips his nose in the limpid stream, and—do we indeed hear him as he draws the water through his open lips? It is a realistic picture and it has the poetry of tender lights, and the glory of the early morning when intangible mists vell the mountain sides and soften their rugged tain sides and soften their rugged

"Crossing the Ford" is the title of the beautiful picture, and as you study it you feel that nature is with you in it you feel that nature is with you in miniature in the quiet studio.

And here are California's golden popples from the hillside upon Mrs Borglum's canvas, and there the pur-ple pansies with their childlike faces seemingly as real as in the garden out of doors. Visiting this studio and breathing the delightful air of the surrounding country you realize how intimate the relation between nature and art. They clasp hands, and the

It will be on exhibition at the art rooms one week, and will then be sent to New York on its way to Poland. It is a rare opportunity for our art-loving public for the exhibition is free, and such pictures are an education in art that

THE NATION'S NEED.

This is essentially an age of fads Modern civilization is, in various directions, running to extremes. The middle path, which is always a safe one to follow, is carefully avoided by the energetic reformer of today, and his pltimatum is "All or nothing. The condition of society is not health; when men are inclined to make he roes of law-breakers, if so be those violators of law represent some fad which they desire to see popularized

The world is full at present of talk about the antagonism existing be tween labor and capital, as if, for sooth, capital were the personification of some evil force that for the good of society should be destroyed. The ettitude of labor toward capital is constantly growing more among that class of laborers who allow others to do their thinking for em instead of doing it themselves

It is this class of workingmen who are setting up clay idols to worship and who in their blindness are making heroes of men like Eugene V. Dehs, the very prince of conspirators against the peace and well-being of ciety, and are of the worst enemi of honest labor that the age can boast. When we hear of such a man as Debs, who has brought more suffering upon the country than any other man in nation today, being seriously talked of, even by ever so small a mi nority, as a possible future President of this great Union, the question naturally arises, "In what direction are we tending?

The only claim of this arch-conspirator to popularity rests in his crime He is a man at whose hands will be required the blood of many a poor victim of the strike which he inaugurated. Hunger and want and wretchedness are the only gifts which he has bequeathed to his deluded followers.

"If my wife needed a two-dollar cloak to keep her warm, and I could money to buy it for her, then I would steal the cloak." These are the words which the San Francisco papers quoted as the utterance of Debs while speaking in that city during his recent visit there, and the same journals state that this sentiment was loudly cheered by the large audience which these means to dispel ignorance and misapprehension. As we become better The workingman of the United acquainted we shall come to have more States has been in advance of the pride in our great State as a whole, workingmen of other countries cause he has been intelligent and selfinterests are mutual and interdepen cting. He has been the bone and the sinew and the strength of the redent. public. It was largely the workingmen of the land who carried the "thinking bayonets" that gave us victory in the late war and saved the life heartily indorsed by every section of the State:

"We envy no Californian who read the dispatches from Santa Barbara yesterday without feelings of sympathy and of admiration. The burning of the pavilion prepared for the coming festival of flowers on the very eve of the opening of the festival could not fall to awaken a keen sympathy for Santa Barbara in the minds of all who care for the prosperity of the State; while the prompt action of the managers of the festival in raising the money for a new building and beginning its construction within two hours after the destruction of the first, commands the admiration of all who have any appreciation of pluck and enterprise.

"Such courage and promptness of action in confronting difficulties and overcoming them are illustrations of that type of energy we proudly claim to be distinctive of the American. In this case the difficulties were many. Time as well as money was involved in the problem. It was not merely that the burning of the building involved a heavy pecuniary loss, but that the work of decoration had been destroyed and that the time for the beginning of the festival was rapidly approaching.

"Under the circumstances there would have been no word of condemnation had the people of Santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed in tented themselves with mereading and the proposed in tented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the mereading and the proposed of the mereading and the proposed of santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselves with mereading and the proposed of the santa Barbara contented themselv of the Union. Loyal hearts were the nen who left forge and plow and bammer and all the utensils of labor to fight their country's battles. Noble bloody battlefields that the dy battlefields that the government of the people and for the people and by the people should not perish from the earth! And is it to men such as these that Debs dare address self and counsel theft and outrage as the remedy to be resorted to for want and poverty? Even the faintest whispered suggestion of such a man as this as the President of a great and free people is simply monstrous, and illustrates to what lengths men blinded by prejudice will go. Let us have with fads and the wild crazes that have seized upon certain classes of community like an epidemic, and wn with the false idols which are leading us to destruction. It is wrong in a prosperous community that there poor to steal from the rich would not make the wrong right. The evil the wrong right. The evil nses which lead to wrong social ms must be sought out and edied. Just laws and their enent are what we need, with the an take the law into his own hands der to remedy the evils from sich he may be suffering.

"Under the circumstances there would have been no word of condemnation had the people of Santa Barbara contented themselves with spreading a tent for the festival and postponed the construction of a new building to a later date. This is the way most cities, even in America, would have solved the problem. It certainly would have been the easiest escape from the difficulty. Santa Barbara, however, was not seeking an escape but a victory. Her people determined to grapple with the mischance and master it. They resolved instantly not only to erect another pavilion, but to make the new one stateller and more spacious than the old. The telegraph was set at work. Orders for decorative material were is Japan, it is announced, has underthe task of civilizing China. his is likely to prove a bigger job the conquering of China.

sued and the task of the new construc-tion was begun before the flames had died out amid the ashes of the burned building.

"Pluck and enterprise of this kind are bound to have their reward. To sy have given Santa Barbara the best advertisement she ever had. They have made her known as the home of energy as well as of beauty, and manifested to the world that within her borders the vigor of Chicago is nurtured amid the roses of Elysium. With such a fame as this, all the host of tourists and pleasure-seekers in the State will be attracted to her festival. Many will wish to see the loveliness of her flowers, and as many more will visit her to see the new pavillon and pay tribute to the swift enterprise that erected it."

THE NEW WOMAN.

There are sensible women in the world who do not march under the banner of the "new woman," women who look at life in a broad, compre ensive way, and are fully cognizant of the possibilities open to woman in the sphere which the Creator seems have especially designed for herthe home-where all the foundations of society are laid and the process of character-building is carried on to the greatest perfection. As a rule, it is only in the home where the good mother is found that the great man is developed. The "new woman" talks very glibly as to what she will accomplish for the future of mankind. As, for instance, Lady Henry Somerset, writing on the condition of her sex in the twentieth century, thinks that then the emancipation of her sex will be completed and that it will work untold good for the race.

"I confidently expect that they will win their greatest laurels in the realm cif government. Many of the great statesmen of the future will be women; many of the most successful dip-lomatists will be women; many of the greatest preachers will be wo-men. The world has lost incalculably men. The world has lost incalculating by the senseless prejudice that has silenced the potent voices of the mothers of the world in aisless of prayer and halls of legislation. The tact of woman would have been of incalculable service to the people in the settling of disputes. From the beginning tiling of disputes. From the beginning a mother has been both statesman and diplomat in the home; from morn-ing until night it has been her work to settle disputes, reconcile the op-posing forces, put down rivalries; in short, to administer justice tempered

By way of foil to this prophecy comes the womanly woman, Mrs. Lynn Linton, whose words breathe everywhere the atmosphere of home, and the royalty of the domestic woman of high ideals. She does not mouth her words, but speaks her sentiments boldly in the following

"The future woman will be admirable only so far as she shall forsake her present extravagant pretensions and return to her own more beautiful and more natural lines. As she is now, under the names of Fin-de-siccle and New Woman, she is all wrong from start to finish, and a national disaster rather than a domes-tic blessing and a social ornament."

We do not question that this loud call for "emancipation" comes from a minority of womankind. Just so soon as woman as a whole demands the right of suffrage it will not be withheld from her. But the majority of thinking, intelligent women do not desire it. It is a burden from wnich they shrink, a responsibility which, which naturally added to the duties fall to woman, would be onerous and unwelcome. When the statement urged that woman would purify politics we lose sight of the fact that it is not the educated, refined and cultured woman alone that would seek to give expression to her preferences at the polls, but the ignorant alien would be there so soon as she could claim the right of citizen ship; women as well as men from the lowest classes of society would be represented, and it is no difficult matter to picture some of the scenes of confusion that would naturally ensue from their being thrown together

We reverence the tried type of woman, the true wife and the noble mother, who is training her children to respect the laws of the land, to become good citizens, and who holds up before them the noblest ideals; who makes home a heaven into which the heavier cares of life do not enter. a place of rest where life's burdens are lightened by sympathy; where loyalty to one's country and to the right are inculcated. The hope of the future lies in homes like these, from which all political bickering is shut out and enduring principles are the power which control action.

President Cleveland has made mis takes-or what many persons regard as such-since he entered the execu tive office. These are legitimate sub jects of criticism and comment. But, so far as is known, his private life has been clean and honorable. No citizen has a right to pry into his personal affairs—much less to repeat or invent idle tales impugning his moral character. There is no excuse for the Rev. Lansing's recent attack upon the President's private character, as Mr. Lansing himself confesses by his retraction of the slander. It is to be regretted, however, that President Cleveland saw fit to take any notice of the matter. The Rev. Lansing's slanderous words would have been best answered by the dignity of si reliable statistics as to the damage done by the March frosts to the fruit crops in Northern and Central California. The net results of the Bee's investigations show that but slight damage was done, comparatively speaking, and that apricots and almonds were practically the only fruits that suffered. The lowest temperature reached in March, 1895, was considerably higher than the minimum for any preceding March since 1877. In Sacramento county the damage was very slight, and was confined to low and exposed places. Malicious dispatches, greatly exaggerating the effects of the frost, were sent to the Eastern papers. The Bee cites one case where a Chicago man, who had lands in that county, canceled his con fornia that such scandalously false reports should be sent out, to intim date would-be investors. It is also a great wrong to the latter, also, who are thus cheated out of the profits which would accrue from their investments. There is no State in the Unio where investments in fruit-lands yield larger, quicker, or more reliable turns than in California-and this statement applies to Northern, Cen-tral and Southern California.

There is more or less gore on the face of the moon as it hovers over San Francisco. The Post having mildly intimated that two San Francisco papers (no names given) were interested in bituminous rock mines or something of that sort, the editor of the Call, for some inscrutable rea on, took the matter as a personal affront, gave the editor of the Post the lie direct (in cold print.) and intimated that he was ready to fight. The edltor of the Post responded in the tu quoque style, announced his office hours, and is presumably awaiting the onset of his bellicose contemporary. The introduction of the Parisian style of journalism in San Francisco will surely have a tendency to awaken some of the "silurians" of that town from their slumbers. But who would have thought that the Call_the osten. tatious advocate and champion of white-winged peace, milk-and-honey, and all such nice things-would be first to draw the sword and beat the air shrieking for gore? Fie, fie, Capt. Shortridge! . . Huh!

Judge Van Dyke yesterday, in the Dalton Wheeler case, decided in effect that the District Attorney is not obliged to issue a warrant upon the application of every person who de power in the matter, and is in duty bound to exercise that discretion to protect the people against the malleious designs of those who seek to work out their private revenges at public expense.

Eastern visitors who go back to their able part of the year in Southern California. It seems to be difficult for an Easterner to believe that our summers are cool and delightful, whereas winters are so mild that out-door life is always enjoyable. It requires a residence of not less than one year in Southern California to appreciate fully its climatic advantages.

The suddenness of the literary exinction of Oscar Wilde has never een equaled. His plays have all been withdrawn, or soon will drawn, from the stage, and his books have been removed from the shelves of English public and private libraries. Only the remembrance of his infamy remains, and this will soon, it is probable, be in part hidden behind prison bars.

An exchange observes that "Woman will doubtless think the man who writes her emancipation proclamation greater than Abraham Lincoln." Go to! The new woman would no more allow the old man to write her emancipation proclamation than she would submit to be hugged by a bear. When that proclamation is written, it must be by a person of the feminine gen-

The Tulare Register wants to get up "a fools' carnival" in that town, and says: "If we can get all the fools in California to come to Tulare and take part in a fools' carnival, we will eclipse the whole 'shooting match' of carnivals and rake in money enough to last us a year." But what need is there for this call from Tulare for outside help.

It is estimated that the people of the end, this year, not less than $40,000,000 for bicycles They would pay five times amount if the prices of bicycles were reduced 50 per cent., as they ought to be, and as they eventually will be.

Some prefix other than Mrs. or Miss will have to be invented for the con-venience of the emancipated woman, who will certainly object to any such reminiscences of bondage. Perhaps it Major.

It is becoming evident that had the 1895 instead of in 1894 there wouldn't have been a baker's dozen of Demo crats in the next Congress. The Democracy were in luck, after all.

Maids came and hovered o'er her,
Spread life's duty plain before her;
But mother's tears
Nor sister's prayers
Could thrust a hope in future years,
For, drooping her head upon her breast,
Clasped grief closer there to rest.

A baby came and smiling found her,
Put his chubby arms around her;
A true charm tries,
For rare wealth lies
In love light caught from his father's eyes;
While fondly she nursed the golden head
Forgotten grief, dethroned, fell dead.

UNREST.

As back of the song is the singer,
As back of the harp is the tone,
So back of the smile oft is sorrow,
And hearts are forever alone.

And hearts are forever alone.

We reach out our arms in our longing.
But empty they fall at the side;
We call and we listen for answers,
Yet still in the silence abide.

Is it God, with His message, I wonder?
Is it time with its knell of the end?
Is it life, is it death, or the nameless
Lost something that comes back to rend?
Well, clods on the coffin have covered
A sleep that is dreamless, we know,
And after the midnight is morning.
And after the sunset the glow.
And out of Now is the Yonder;

And out of Now is the Yonder; And out of unrest is the rest; And reaching the star, does it matter How far was the way from the west? ROSA PEARLE.

Canon Carmichael, in a lecture in Dublin recently, said there was one class of women who injured the movement for woman's progress, namely, those who went about reviling and vilifying man, acting as if there was no good man in the world, and no bad women except those whom man had made bad.

As our brave fire-fighters never hestitate to risk their lives and limbs in the defence and protection of our lives and property from the ravages of the fire fiend, the public will beyond all doubt, give them a rousing benefit, and there is no doubt Turnverein Hall will be filled with revelers on Friday evening. The ball has received the sanction of the Fire Commissioners and chief engineer, and all the "boys" are working like beavers to make it a success. They are sure of adding, a large amount to the treasury of the relief fund, and they are determined to make it the most enjoyable masquerade of the season. All who attend will discover that the "boys" are as great fun-makers as they are fire-fighters. All the visiting fire chiefs will be in attendance and the "boys" who "run wid der machine" are going to give them and their ether guests an evening's sport never to be forgotten. Schoneman & Blanchard's Orchestra will furnish the music. Tickets can be procured from all firemen and at all the engine-houses.

In this work-a-day life of toilsome America there is too much of the everlasting grind, and a community that can shake itself loose from the travail of trade and the great national hustle is to be congratulated. This is the ideal spot for such festivals as is the one that begins Tuesday afternoon with a parade of gorgeous glory and barbaric splendor, and it is to be devoutly wished that, as the years go by, the carnival may be made yet richer, brighter, more entertaining and more lavish with splendor than is this one which promises so much. The San Francisco tom-tom must have the head of it nearly beaten in by this time, judging by the fan faranade that has been going on for several long and tiresome weeks about the new railroad.

Was ever public enterprise so be diviled by the raucous hewgag and the howling dervish as has been the sugar line that promises to lead the frowsy metropolis out of the Slough of Despond? Doubtful!

The people of California who live in this end of the State will be glad to see one, two or a dozen railroads built out of the Bay City to any dumbed spot on earth, if they will only go ahead and build them and not turn the commonwealth into a Midway Plaisance. This noise of the huzzy-guzzy, rattle of bells, tooting of horns and hammering on tin pans as though the people were a swarm of bees, is enough to disgust everybody with sense enough to disgust everybody with sense enough to go in out of the wet. The noise now being made, however, is but a feeble wall in comparison with what may be anticipated when the road is finally built and its managers begin to try and earn enough with the property to pay expenses. Watch out for the howling when the new road begins to charge all the traffic will bear. Oh! but !t will be ear-splitting and hair-raising—you see if it isn't!

When autumn her treasure is pouring.
From orchard, from vineyard and field,
Renewing each harvest the wonder
Of richness in bounty of yield;
When music of schoolbells is ringing,
And all with new life are possessed,
We ery: "Ah, the future is golden!
This part of the year is the best."

When spring brings the pansies and liller And comes with the mocking-bird's song; When golden with poppless are hilisides; When trees biosom slowly and long; And harvests begin to be gathered. Then surely it must be confessed, Whatever be said of the other. This season of all is the best.

This is the time of the poppy—Califor nia's typical flower. Other climes may pro-duce it in all its snowy, silky softness, or in its regal scarlet beauty; but 'tis here that the eternal sunshine, with Midas in its regal scarlet beauty; but 'tis here that the eternal sunshine, with Midas touch, transmutes it into vibrant gold, and with all the prodigality that things golden are wont to be created under this same sun. And yet, little poppy, thou art not particularly plutocratic in thy bearing, as we gaze into thy glowing hollow and take inventory of thy exquisite texture, delicate tracery and palpable softness, but, lo! en masse, thou art golden splendor, magnificence itself, riches rampant in the ionely mountain pass, and on the silent foothill, here creeping close to Nature's heart, there saucily luxuriant, in the furrowed orchard, everywhere making the curved hillside and the undulating lowland twice beautiful.

Riotous banks of poppies! Fields ablaze with poppies! The very earth bristling with poppies! all rimmed round with the mighty mountains, whose heads and shoulders, glistening with winter, make up a picture painted and framed by that great artist—Nature—who delights in giving his most skillful touch to the sublime masterpieces he hangs in this fair land, one of his most delightful galleries, and through whose revel of beauty both little and grown-up folk go trooping, to come away with unlimited stint of God's own good gifts—fresh air, gunshine and floral wealth—only to go back tomorrow with

THIS store will be open every day this week. All hail Fiesta! Like the sun upon the ocean mist the glimmer of the rainbow is reflected upon the surroundings. The store is made attractive by the lavish decorations. Visiting strangers are invited to take a look through the store as well as to take a view of the streets. There is a fete of colors and scenes all along the line. While this is true there are other attractions in the way of goods and prices. Nearly every visitor will do a certain amount of trading. There will be room for all. Belts will have a large sale this season. We are showing for fiesta week a new line of Silk Belts with fine metal buckles for 25c. Fine and better goods in a much larger assortment and in all colors for 50c. Many a business house is asking a dollar for the same class of goods. Carriage Shades for 75c, $1, $1.25 and $1.50. Sun shades for $1, $1.25 and $1.50 that are much better bargains than usual. Parasols are cheaper than headaches. Still a few yards of fiesta ribbons and fiesta buntings. We are prepared in our millinery department to turn out stylish headgear on short notice. Plenty of the new high-crowned Sailors from 25c to $2. Ready-made Suits ready to put on for less than the materials and making cost you. They will fit better and hang better than made-to-order goods. Separate Skirts and Silk Waists. Just a moment to look and you are conviced the making will cost you nothing. What a world of saving in the work in these made-to-order goods. New Capes. What will the ladies do after awhile when everything they wear will be handed them ready to put on. Making Muslin Underwear is out of date. The made-to-order goods are much cheaper, better made and more stylish. You know the merits of the Royal Worcester Corsets. They stand at the top for fit, style and lowness of price. Royal Worcester Corsets will cost you no more than any other make. They are far superior. Try them. Plenty of metal back Side Combs for 10c, 16c, 25c, 35c and 50c. Hair Ornaments in the largest assortment. There is no place in the city where silks can be bought as cheap as here, 25c, 40c, 50c and 60c and 75c a yard for the largest variety.

IN THE BAHAMAS.

Facts About the Pineapple and Sisal Industries.

vine-tenths of the Pineapples from the Islands Go to New York.

Interesting Facts About Raising the Luscious Fruit in its Perfection. Useful Fiber Contained in the Leaves.

It has been said that Oakland is the bed-chamber of San Francisco and that Brooklyn is the graveyard of New York. In the same sense it can be said that Nassau.serves as both bed-chamber and grave yard to all the Bahama Islands. It is cutte natural but this chamber as the said of th quite natural that this should be so is quite natural that this should be so for Nassau is not only the capital of the Bahamas, but the only settlement on the islands worth the name of town or even village. The larger islands of the Bahama group are Elenthers, Andros, Great Abaco and Little Abaco. At a central point among these islands is the small related Nassau, the capital. As it is within easy sailing distance of all the islands under cultivation it is natural that the colored population should prefer to recolored population should prefer to re-turn to Nassau at night. Sometimes colored population should prefer to return to Nassau at night. Sometimes during the pineapple-gathering season the workmen are induced to remain on the plantation island until Saturday night, but Suiday always finds them at their familiar haunts in Grant's Town, as this portion of Nassau most given over to the colored population, is known.

The Bahamas, as a whole, until recently, have been a region of neglected opportunities. Up to within a few years ago the chief occupations were spongs fishing and gin drinking. During the dvil war Nassau was a convenient base of operations in blockade-running and was the scene of much activity and prosperity.
But this did not last long and was/really more harmful than otherwise.

The appointment of Sir Ambrose Shea as Governor marked a new era in the commercial prosperity of the Bahamas.
Upon his arrival at Nassau he at once began a study of the undeveloped resources of the islands. The result of his

There is no reason, with one exception, so far as I could learn, why pineapples should not grow quite as well and become as profitable an industry in California as in the Bahamas or Florida. In speaking of that exception I have to do so knowing that I must treat of the one subject nearest the Californian's heart—climate. The climate of the Bahamas and the peninsula of Florida, the two places where pineapples grow best, is that warm, baimy perfume-laden thing we read about and longed for in childhood, while the climate of California is that of the Bahamas purified, clarified and, I might add, rarefled. What the pineapple needs most is not so that cheap labor is not always the most profitable. There is one point in which Californians would have the advantage over the Bahamas. That is in the less frequent handling of the fruit. When, a vasel seeks a load of pineappies from the Bahamas she must first go to Nassau to "enter," then she proceeds to the island where the plantation is located and anothers in a convenient place as near shore as possible. The apples are gathered from different parts of the island, brought to the beach and stacked when they must be transferred by boats to the yeasel. All this necessitates several handlings which is more or less damaging to the fruit and much a water-soaked soil as a moisture-lader atmosphere. The soil and temperature of California are certafuly all that can be asked for "pine" raising, and if there are any spots where the togs love to linger, there pineapples will thrive. However, it is possible that if experiments were made a variety could be developed that would do well in any of the frostless belts of California. Too much moisture is quite as detrimental as too dry a climate. This is prover by conditions in England where large quantities of pineapples are raised in bothouses. It is noticed there that during unusually dry seasons the pineapples are of much finer flavor than during a wet season when they are coarsegrained and lacking in saccharine. This proves that stmospheric conditions govern quality, for rainfall of itself would not to which must be added the tumbling of a see voyage which cuts more or less of a figure according as the trip is a rough or a smooth one. When loaded the vessel must return to Nassau for clearance papers. All these things enter into the expenses and add to the elements of uncertainty that always attend voyaging in the Bahama waters. There is no question but what California could have the field to herself from Chicago west, even if shut out of the New York market. The cost of reshipment in New York, jobbers' profits and freight to Chicago, should more than offset any advantage Nesseau may have in transportation to New York as against rates from California to the East.

The ordinary yield of pineapples as grown in the Bahamas is about 2500 to the acre, which is a conservative estimate. An acre has been known to yield 3500 marketable apples. There are quite a number of small planters who do not raise a sufficient quantity to load a schooner. Such as these sell their crop to the larger planters and receive from $3 to $6 a hundred, delivered on the beach. The only attention the crop needs is one hooing after planting, and, taking 2500 as the acre crop, the returns will average about one hundred dollars. However, the planters who can ship to the New York market, get better returns. Prices there range from $3 to $14 a hundred. March 25 of this year quotations were $16 to $20 a hundred. Fancy varieties bring much higher prices than I have quoted.

A fine quality of cloth is manufactured from the fiber of the pineapple plant. It is known as pine muslin. It is very durable and when properly woven is of fine texture. This cloth is sometimes confounded with what is known as grass-cloth, which is made from the fiber of a different plant. The two cloths can be distinguished by examining the thread is twisted. Pine-muslin is not likely to become a popular article of commerce until some one becomes sufficiently interested in the industry to spend considerable money in the production of special machinery that will handle the fi too high for the best results in pineapple culture.

I have no doubt but that the pineapple industry can be made to be quite a profitable one in California, but it will require some one to take the initiative step. The person who does this will need to go at it with the same determination that Daniel Film did when he started in 1857 to raise hops on the bettom-lands of the Sacramento River.

Whether or not California could compete with the Bahama planters in the New York market, much will depend upon transportation rates. The negro laborers of Nassau work for about $3$ to $4$ a week. They are paid for the most part in store cut and transplanted will bear fruit in one year. The ships shoot out at the base of the fruit or apple, and will bear fruit in two years. The crown is the tuft of leaves that grow at the top end of the apple, and have only to be cut off and set in the ground, when you have a young pineapple plant, but it will not bear fruit for two years. for two years.

As the suckers produce practical results in just one half the time that "slips" or "crowns" do, the latter are seldom used in setting out a field of pineapples, but they are used in experimenting for new inquiries was that he set about it to develop the pincapple and sisal industries. As the great market for pincapples is in the United States, he interested Americans in the pincapple plantations and brought English cordage manufacturers to the islands in order to interest them in the sisal industry. He demonstrated his faith in both industries by investing his own money in them as well as that of his friends, and what has been done in the Bahamas should be of interest to all Californians.

When settling out the field the suckers When settling out the field the suckers are planted quite close together, so close, in fact, that when full grown the strong, spiny leaves of the neighboring plants overlap each other and form an almost impassable barrier to any but an expert. The only cultivation the plants receive is when the young suckers have taken root the negroes hoe the dirt more closely around the growing plant. Cultivation as followed by Californians in their vine-yards and orange groves is here un-as followed by Californians in their vineyards and orange groves is here unknown. On the other hand over-cultivation forces the growth too rapidity, and then the apple is cross-grained and sour.

A loose sandy soil is required. In England, where they make quite a business of vaising pineapples in hothouses, strong fertilizers are used, but nothing of the sort is used in the Babamas. There the soil so of itself very fertile. The islands are of coral formation, and the soil very thin, varying in depth from one or two faches to one foot. However, any plant of vigorous growth that can force its roots into the soft coral will grow and flourish. When the natives wish to set out a coccanut tree they start out with a basketful of earth, some young coccanut trees and a crowbar. They find a soft spot in the coral, dig into it with the crowbar to the depth of eighteen inches.
The hole is half filled with dirt and the tree put in and filled around. Here et will grow and thrive quite as well as in three or six feet of soil. The coral seems to give sustemance to plant lifte.
A motable example of the is seen in the the soil more than six inches deep, consequently its roots are exposed, and the tree practically sits on a rock. Coral is a paculiar rock, and when not supposed to the air is comparatively soft and porous.

Whon quarried and exposed to the action of the atmosphere it hardens and makes a very good quasity of buildings stone. However, the coral of itself is not responsible for the itururious growth of the pine apple. This is provan from the fact that it grows quite as well in Floridas in a deep sandy soil no more fertile than can be found almost anywhere in California.

PIRATE TREASURE.

IR HENRY MORGAN AND THE SACKING

[From a Special Contributor.] It has already been told how Pierre le Grand took the Spanish treasure ship—the vice-admiral of the West Indies flotilla— off Cape Tiburon, in the western part of Hispaniols; how that achievement was the beginning of buccaneer piracy, which was taken up by others, who became even more famous than he—such men as Mansvelt, Bartholomew, Portugues, Roch Brazillanous, Francoise Loionoise, and finally the great Sir Henry Morgan—one time Gov-ernor of Jamaica under King Charles II. Of him—then Capt. Morgan—it is now to be told, and of his famous attack on the great and beautiful city of Panama, on the west coast of the Isthmus of Darien. In the years that followed that famous manded the entrance to the stream and the stream itself for some distance up its course. This fortress the buccanesr would have to take before they would dare to enter the river itself. Accordingly Capt. Morgan set sail with his buccaneer fact from the Island of Santa Catherina to thus begin his great adventure.

Morgan set sail with his buccaneer fleet from the Island of Santa Catherina to thus begin his great adventure.

The attack upon the castle was made at night. It was a repetition, though not quite so terrible, of the attack upon Porto Bello. All night long the fight continued by the light of the flaming roofs of the houses within the fortifications, and the blazing balls which the English hurled over the pallisades and into the entrenchments. There was a terrific explosion, as one of the powder magazines blew up in a lurid flame, and a cloud of stones and beams. For a moment the fight lulled, only to be renewed again more furlously than ever.

At last morning broke, showing breaches here and there where the walls had crumbled away before the explosions, and had fallen into the ditch. Into the breaches dashed the buccaneers and the fortress was won, the brave governor fighting to the last and until a musket bullet crashed through his brain, and he fell dead against the wall.

Many of the Spaniards, rather than surrender themselves to the English, flung themselves over the wall of the rocky precipice into the sea. Of all the 314 men who defended the castle only about thirty remained alive, and twenty of them were more or less seriously wounded.

Thus the Castle of Chagres was won and the great expedition was begun.

It was upon the 16th day of August, 1670, that Capt. Morgan and his buccaneers began their famous expedition across the Isthmus of Panama, an expedition that lasted only nine days—but nine such days; The old historian who has handed down the story of this expedition was himself one of the buccaneers—a Dutchman by the

Yet when all this vast wealth was di-vided among the buccaneers each one re-ceived only the merest pittance—hardly enough indeed to carry them back to Jamaica. All of the greater part of the treasure—the gold, silver and jewels— Capt. Morgan kept for himself and his few chosen comrades.

Thus, at one sweep, Capt. Henry Mor-

Such was the sacking of Panama and

Capt. Morgan kept for himself and his few chosen comrades.

Thus, at one sweep, Capt. Henry Morgan made himself one of the richest and most famous men in the West Indies, and when Modiford, the then Governor of Jamaica returned to England, he was knighted Sir Henry Morgan and appointed lieutenant-governor of the chief English colony in the western world.

But after all his wickedness did not prosper him in the long run, for when England entered into league with Spain at the treaty of Ryswick, one of the considerations was that Sir Henry Morgan should be tried for his piracies. Accordingly he was recalled to England. There he was arrested and thrown into the Tower of London.

His case was never brought up for trial; it was postponed and postponed from time to time until femile.

AN HISTORIC CHURCH. The Strange History of the Cathedral of Chihuahua.

[Frem a Special Correspondent.] From a Special Correspondent.)
The cathedral of San Francisco, in the city of Chihuahua, Mexico, deserves to be placed on the list of the wonders of the world. Beautifully located on the principal plaza of the city, its slender, graceful tower rises high above the trees and glistens cool and white against a background of bleak mountains and bluest sky. "Graceful massive beautiful massificant" ac-of bleak mountains and bless say. Grace-ful, massive, beautiful, magnificent," ex-claims every visitor; but if the grand ca-thedral itself is extraordinarily attractive, its history is no less so, for it's as strange as if made during the days of the pyramids.

Two hundred and nineteen years ago, in 1675, Chihushua, "the place where things are made," was only a lively frontier Cath-are made," was only a lively frontier Catholic mission.

The cathedral was built on ideas borrowed from both the Moorish and the Gothic architecture. The rich facade, in its elegance and purity of complicated filingree, contrasts agreeably with the severer style of the rest of the gran mass. It is the work of an artist who was sentenced to death for some crime, but was promised that the sentence would not be carried out until he had completed ornamenting the front of the cathedral. For twenty-one years the artist stood upon the platforms until he had completed ornamenting the front of the cathedral. For twenty-one years the artist stood upon the platforms and cut into stone his beautiful dreams; and cut into stone his beautiful dreams; and cut into stone his beautiful dreams; and for twenty-one years armed serthnels paced the walks down below, and conveyed him to and from his prison. At last, old, broken down and sick, he notified the authorities that his work was done, and he was ready to die. Then came pardon, banquets and honor with mocking rapidity; but it was too late, and his eyes closed before he reached the ship that was to carry him to sunny France; and today even his name has been erased from the manuscripts and from the cathedral that is his monument.

As the walls arose slowly, thousands of men, soldiers and slaves, brought dirt in rawhide bags on their backs and slowly and laboriously built up huge inclined planes all around the building. No scaffold or derricks were used in the contisquetion of the shell, but each stone was pushed and pulled up the long inclines, and to the summit of each wall and tower by human hands, toiling under a tropical sun, and smarting under the lash of cruel taskmasters. As the towers rose to a height of over one hundred and fifty feet, the inclines from each were over half a mile long, and the dirt fell over and covered the church, and by the time the towers had reached their full height of over two hundred feet the church had disappeared in a vast mound of earth. For seven more long years the patient workers toiled to remove the mountain they had themselves built up sack by sack, and thus dig out the marvel they had constructed.

In 1886 the roof of the church was crowded with Mexicans watching the progress of the battle between their forces and the troops of Maxamillian; but hastily climbed down when a cannon ball cracked one, which he wished to send to the Columbian Exposition; but an examination proved the interesting fact that the bellin had all been cast in the towers when the church was built, an

EASTER SONG.

Awaken, sweet flowers!
The snow in the valleys has melted at last, and the desolate sight of the year is past;
The ice-chains are broken, the robins are singlingAwake to the call of the Easter bells ringing!

Awaken, O heart!
In bondage of sin thou hast slumbered so long,
Arise in the beauty and rapture of song,
Arise in the gladness of nature's adorningCome forth in thy strength on this glad Easter and died by the way in those nine short days.

Nevertheless, they toiled heavily onward until the tenth day, when, from the summit of a high mountain, they suddenly saw the first view of the Pacific or great South sea, as it was called, spread out beneath them bine and far away.

There was a ship and six boats salling away toward a distant island. Then the buccaneers knew that they must be near their journey's end.

But a sight still better to their eyes than the far occan was a drove of cattle feeding upon the campagna below them. There at last was food—almost the first they had seen since they left the Castle of Chagres. Within half an hour a score of bullocks had been killed, strips of meat were roasting before the fires and the buccanhers were feeding like famished wolves.

That same evening they caught a distant glimpse of a troop of some 200 horsemen who halloed something to them which they could not understand. A little while after and then they saw the first glimpse of Panama—a tall steeple showing shove the trees. "This steeple they had no sooner discovered," says the buccanear historian, "than they began to show signs of extreme joy, casting up their hats into the air, leaping for mirth and shouting even just as if they had already obtained the victory and entire accomplishment of their designs. All their trumpets were sounded and every drum beaten in token of this universal acclamation and huge alacrity of their minds.

There is not space here to describe the two days fighting before the walls of Panama.

There were but 800 half-starved buccaneers and nearly 4000 Spaniards, but despite that, and despite trenches and raised batteries and fortification and walls, Panama fell and the bucaneers rushed into it, a seething, howling, yelling mob.

Then folowed the old story of sack and piliage. Added to this a fire broke cut one day in one of the lower quarters of the town, and before the cased nearly the whole of Panama, the second largest city of the West Indies, the treasure house of the Pacific Coast, w and broke into rollicking songs.

We had made a mile or so in this fashion, when, shooting round a sharp elbow of the river, we were thunderstruck to find ourselves abreast of a large Indian camp pitched on the bank. The narrowing of the stream at this point brought us within twenty yards of our foes. Leaping to their feet the Indians stood for a moment transfixed with surprise, minds. But not from the Indian's. In his heart he nurtured vengeance.

As time went by, life at Ump-qua grew rather monotonous for Jed and me, so that we began to hanker after fresh adventures. One day we learned that there emptled into the Ump-qua a certain stream, the exploration of which promised considerable sport. This tributary was known as Smith's River, after an unfortunate trapper who had been killed by the Indians many waste hefore.

when we had arranged our plans we made them known to Wattle Linn, a sturdy old backwoodsman who had taken quite a fancy to us youngsters and had more than once proved himself a true friend.

"Don't ve go, boys," said Wattle.
"Why not," asked Jed. "We can

What is it, then? Are you afraid of the Indians cutting us off?"
"Wal, yes; that's about it," replied Wat-

But we only laughed at the outerlows fears, and by 10 o'clock next morning we were all ready to start.

We burdened our canoe with nothing but what was absolutely necessary. We took our sleeping blankets, a few simple provisions, and a couple of double-barrelled guns.

Just as we were pushing off, along came

Just as we were pushing off, along came Wattle.

"So yer bound to go, boys," he said half reproachfully. "Wal, good luck to ye. But look hyar, I want ye to promise me a something. Guess it'll take ye three days to get up to Smith's, thar bein' a freshet in the river, but a day ought to fetch yer back alick as grease. Now give me yerword, boys, to be back hyar by five days at the latest; that is, if ye kin."

We promised the old fellow and dipped our paddles, impatient to be off.

"Good lads, and now look hyar, if so be as you meet trouble, and hev to quit the cance and tramp home, make tracks down the right bank of the river—the right bank of the river—the right bank do you heer?" yelled Wattle, for we had been paddling off while he spoke and were now some distance away.

We waved our hands at him, and next minute a bend in the river took him out of our sight. Then a breeze springing up we holsted our little square sail and sped merrily on our course.

II.

Nothing particular happened until the afternoon of the third day.

Nothing particular happened until the afternoon of the third day. We were rippling along very quietly, when suddenly Jed reached over the side of the cance and fished something out of the water. It proved to be a small, closely-woven Indian basket.

"That's bad, Jed," I exclaimed, "sure as guns there's redskins ahead of us."

"Looks like it," responded Jed, "and see, there is where they camped."

We paddled in shore to examine the marks, and found some fresh embers and other evidences of a large party of redskins.

"We'd have met the beggars if they had

Jed?"

"Done! go ahead and trust in Providence," replied Jed." They may be friendly or they may not. Anyhow, we've got our riffes, so here goes for up stream again," and bending to it we sent our canoe speeding through the current.

As we proceeded the banks steepened, and the thick, overhanging foliage, shutting out the sunlight, made the river dark and gloomy. This gloom acted not a little on our spirits, and we were beginning to wish that we had taken old Wattle's advice when we emerged and

"What's that yonder?" cried Jed, pointing to a hill a little distance ahead. It's sloping side was dotted with what looked to be huts. We rested on our paddles and gazed upon the seens with silent anxiety.

"There's nothing stirring," said I, after a moment or two. "Let's paddle up a little closer."

"We found the cause of our wonder to be an old Indian burying ground. The hut-like risings were simply hillocks of earth, each of which marked the resting place of a warrior. Over these mounds

Onward we dazhed, our pursuers in full ory behind us, and gaining rapidly by reason of the lightness of their canoes.

"Beach her, Joe!" screamed Jed. "Quick! Quick! Our only chance is to leg it."

With a swift wave of our paddles we turned the nose of our antique craft toward the bank, reaching which we leaped ashore. I seized the gun and in two seconds we were tearing through the thick brushwood toward the forest beyond. Being of lighter weight than Jed, I assily outstripped him, and, terror being at my heels, I too: little thought of anything, for the time being, but self-preservation.

I had entered the forest perhaps half a mile when I slowed down and glanced behind me for my companion. To my sur-prise and dismay he was nowhere to be

Then followed some minutes of fearful suspense, after which I grew calmer, concluding that somehow or other I had cluded our pursuers. But the doubtful cluded our pursuers but the doubtful the state of the state o fate of my poor companion weighed very heavily upon my spirits.

That afternoon and evening I tramped many miles. At nightfall, being utterly fagged out, I threw myself upon the turf beside a small stream and was soon sound

I awoke a little after dawn, cold, stiff and desperately hungry. I had eaten nothing since the morning before. Looking around to see what offered for breakfast, my eye caught sight of a sand crane soaring overhead. Firing at it I brought it down. It took but a few minutes to I had eaten probabilibefore. Look-light a fire, and set the bird on to cook, but it took longer to devour it when it was done, for the critter was mighty tough and dry eating.

The meal strengthened and inspirited me, however, and I was about to move along, though I didn't quite know where, when I was startled to hear a crackling among the brush wood. My heart stood still with terror. Was it Indian, panther or grizzly bear? Nearer came the sound and nearer. I set my teeth and brought my rifie to my shoulder ready to fire as soon as the thing should break cover.

Presently, who should stagger into view but Jed, the poor fellow ready to drop with fatigue and hunger. With a cry of joy I bounded forward to meet him. He was too much exhausted to speak, but thegrip of the dear fellow's hand told me how glad he was to find me safe and sound.

When he had rested a bit and devoured the remnants of the sand crane, he told me his adventures. There wasn't much to tell, to be sure; simply that he had stumbled and before he had recovered himself he had lost sight of me among the trees. He heard the redskins behind him, but managed to keep well ahead, until, reaching a friendly stream, he had dashed into it and so destroyed his trail. Then coming ashore he had trudged through the woods all the afternoon and night, and seeing the smoke of my morning fire, he had made for it, caring little whether he should find friend or foe.

Jed took a short nap and awoke much refreshed.

"Wattle was right, Joe," said he, "and I wish we had taken his advice. But there's no use crying over what can't be helped, so what now?"

"Just this," I responded, "we must get back to the right bank of Smith's River, just as Wattle told us."

"We may strike the Indians again, but I have nothing better to propose," said Jed, and off we started.

We had been forthoughted enough yesterday afternoon, while yet we deemed ourselves a long distance from the Indians, to shoot a few birds and cook-them. Thus prepared with food a few meals ahead, we should not be compelled to discharge our gun, and so run the risk of betraying our position to our sharp-eared enemies.

An unfortunate accident, however, put us in the very situation we had studied to avoid. Jed, who was carrying the gun, while clambering over some rocks, made a misstep and fell. The weapon fiew from his hand, and the trigger striking hard against a stump, a loud report followed which echoed and reverberated among the surrounding hills.

But that was not the worst. Jed's ankle received a very bad twist in his fail, and for some minutes the poor fellow was agonized with pain.

Fortunately, the acuteness of it soon passed, however, and after resting a bit and tinding up the wounded member with a spareable portion of his shirt, he felt able to move along. And it was time, for now we noticed a column of smoke rising nearly opposite our position, from the other bank of the river.

"A signali" cried Jed. They must have heard the report. What a clumsy idiot I was:"

"And see!" said I, "there's an answering signal to the right and another to the ieft. But we've got a good start of them, and before they strike our t and before they strike our trail we must be miles away."

All that afternoon we toiled nuward over our rugged course. Meantime, however, Jed's wounded ankle grew worse, until at sunset it was swollen to twice its natural size, and he could proceed no further.

As luck would have it, we were close to an excellent camping ground, and one which offered great capabilities for defense against the Indians, who, we felt certain, would shortly be upon us.

Twilight slowly darkened into night. The moon rose and cast her fading light upon the scene. A more welcome light I think I shall never behold. Presently, signal fires on the hills near by toid us that the rest of our enemies were close at hand. Again I looked to the priming of my gun and otherwise prepared for action. Jed's wounds had rendered him pretty nearly hors de combat; but he drew his bowie and held it in his left hand ready for use in case of a sudden onslaught.

For fully twenty milutes we heard nothing of our foes, though we knew we'll the cowardly fellows were debating how best to feach us. The from ambush in the wardly fellows were debating how best reach us. Then from ambush in the wild oats we heard voices, as though they were encouraging each other to charge, and we realized that the crisis was at hand. It was a moment of horrible sus-and we resilized that the crisis was a hand. It was a moment of horrible suspense.

VIII.

Suddenly I was startled by an exclamation from Jed.

"It's all up, Jed!" he cried. "No use firing. The villains, have got, us in the rear."

I turned round to see a cance full of men paddling notselessly, but swiftly up the river.

"Surrounded!" I exclaimed, and the gun dropped from my nerveless hands. "We're lost! Good-by, Jed. old fellow!"

"Hist. boys, hist!" whispered a voice from the bow of the cance.

"Good heavens, it's Wattle!"

"Ay, boys, and just in the nick of time. Catch hold of this har line and haul us in right smart." said Wattle, softly, as he threw me the rope. "And now you. Ben, Harry, Dave, Jump ashore lively, all of you; get well under the hank, and handle your shootin' irons. Sure as guns, the copper skins are goin in for a rush."

This was done, and all so quietly and quickly that the Indians knew nothing of our reinforcements. A minute later they broke cover, rushed into the open and with a blood-curdling yell, charged pell mell down upon us.

"Fire!" shouted Wattle, in a voice that rang loud above the uproar, and instantly five spouts of flame flashed in the faces of our foes.

Surprised, thunderstruck, utterly discomfitted, the advancing body reeled backward from the volley they had so little

Surprised, thunderstruck, utterly discomfitted, the advancing body reeled backward from the volley they had so little expected. Then they broke ranks and field, leaving two of their number prostrate upon the ground.

"After 'em, boys! Scatter the skunks!" relied Wattie, leaping up over the bank, and, giving chase, we sent them flying in all directions, each Indian intent only on securing his personal eafety.

Then returning to the bank, we sought our fallen foes. The first we came up to was lying face downward, having pitched forward as a bullet found his heart. Turning him over, we found he was none other than the villainous Wah-kia-na. The other Indian had managed to crawl away, and proposities hidden among the cats.

than the villainous Wah-kla-na. The other Indian had managed to crawl away, and probable by hidden among the oats.

"One we war only lest in time for the mues, young feliar," grinned Wattle.

"In the very nick of time," said Jed.
Noble old Wattle! What could we do less than to wring his brawny, honest hand, and thank him from the bottom of our hearts for his generous action. We got Jed down to the Ump-qua as quickly as possible, and had his wounds properly attended to, with the result that he was soon out and about, none the worse for his hard experience.

THE EVERLASTING MEMORIAL

(The Favorite Poem of Bishop Brooks's Mother.)
Up and away like the dew of the morning.
That soars from the earth to its home in the sun.
So let me steal away, gently and lovingly,
Only remembered by what I have done.

My name and my place and my tomb all for gotten, The brief race of time well and patiently run So let me pass away, peacefully, silently, Only remembered by what I have done.

Gladly away from this toll would I hasten, Up to the crown that for me has been won Unthought of by man in rewards or in praises Only remembered by what I have done. Yes, like the fragrance that wanders in darkmess,
When the flowers that it came from are closed up and gone,
So would I be to this world's weary dwellers,
Only remembered by what I have done.

Needs there the praise of the love-written record.
The name and the epitaph graved on the stone?
The things we have lived for, let them be our atory.

He is only remembered by what he has done.

BRE'B RABBIT.

With us the hare is of the remote northern woods, the rabbit is of the fields and bushy margins of the woods. One retreats before man and etwitization, the other follows in their wake. The rabbit is now common in parts of our State (New York). common in parts of our State (New York) when in my boyhood only the hare was found. The rabbit evidently loves to be neighbor to man and profits by it. Nearly every winter one takes up har abode under my study floor, and when the snow is deep and the weather is cold she usually finds every night a couple of sweet apples on her threshold. I suppose she thinks they grow there, or are blown there by the wind like the snow. At such times she does not leave her retreat; the apples are good fortume enough. If I neglect to put them there, in the morning I see where she has gone forth over the lawn Jodking for them, or for some other food.

One summer a wild rabbit came up within a few feet of my neighbor's house; scooped out a little place in the turf and reared her family there. I suppose she felt more secure from prowling cats and dogs than in the garden or vineyard. My neighbor took me out to let me into her secret. He pounted down to the ground a few feet in front of us and said, "there it is." I looked and saw mothing but the newly-mown turf with one spot the size of my two hands where the grass was apparently dead. "I see no rabbits nor signs of rabbite." I replied. He stooped to this dry spot and lifted up a little blanket or carpet of matted dry grass and revealed one of the pretuest sights I have ever reen, and the only one of the kind I had ever lookel upon! four or five little rabbits half the size of chipmunks, cuddled down in a dry fur-lined nest. They did not move or wink, and their cars were pressel down close to their heads. My neighbor let the coverild fall back and they were bidden again as if my magic.

rat. The rest of them fiel and disap-peared through the grass, but the next morning they were back in the nest, served, did the mother visit and nurse them.

There was no opening into the nest, the mat of dried grass covered it completely, so that the mother, in her visits to them, must have lifted it up and crept beneath. It was a very pretty and cunning devise. One might have stepped upon it in his walk, but surely his eyes alone would never have penetrated the secret. I am told by men wise in the lore of the fields and woods that the rabbit always covers her nest and young with a little blanket, usually made of fur plucked from her own breast.

Capt. Morgan had expected to fight his way across the Isthmus, but he soon found that there was no fighting to be done—that he had a far more terrible foe to contend with than Spanish enemies. That foe was famine.

Almost immediately—upon the very first day of their expedition they found that every Spanish village had been deserted by its inhabitants, who had fied away into the tropical forests either carrying away with them or destroying every particle of food, every crumb of bread, every grain of maize. Nothing was left, nothing but the empty bags of raw-hide which had once held the meal or the grain of the Indian corn. And as it was that first day, so it was every day. Every village they came fo along the shores of the river they found empty—stripped of everything, naked, deserted.

The third day they left the river and took to the forest paths. Here, too, they would come now and then upon an intend-anherement of Pierre le Grand, the buccaneers so harried and swept the Spanish main that it became no longer safe for Spain to send treasure-ships across the ocean, except in large fleets and under convoy of powerful ships of war. Until such fleets could be assembled and such convoy secured the treasures of gold and silver collected by the Spanish agents in the Americas had to be deposited in such great fortified towers as Carthagenia, on the north coast of South America or Panama, on the west coast of the Darien Isthmus, each of which was a great fortress—cities defended by massive buttressed walls and towers, and by outer fortifications commanding all approaches to it.

Again and again and again the buccaneers turned their eyes toward these two strongholds, with their accumulated wealth. But it was not until the coming of Henry Morgan that any one dared undertake such a tremendous task as an open attack, either upon the one or the other.

Un to this time the buccaneers had been The third day they left the river and took to the forest paths. Here, too, they would come now and then upon an inland willage—a group of poor wattled huts clustered miserably together, but here also it was always the same—always they were empty, deserted, stripped of everything. If only the buccaneers could have fought somebody. It would have been something—but there was nobody to fight, nothing to do but starve in the midst of the luxuriance of the tropical forest. Now and then a few Spanlards and Inther.

Up to this time the buccaneers had been any other pirates—depending upon their hips and their sailors, and upon bloody lea battles to win for them those treasures, which they afterward spent "so pulckly and so rapidly in Port Royal and

It was not until Henry Morgan organized them into regular armies, supported by regular fleets of warships, and with these fleets and armies attacked other fleets and fortified inland strongholds, that the buccaneers reached the height of their terror and devastation. Now and then a few Spaniards and Indians would appear at some of the rocky heights to look down upon the buccaneer army and to halloo derisively: "Ha! per-ros! a la Savana!" "Ha dogs!

It is a quaint little place, and yet it is right in the midst of a fashionable neighborhood. It midst of a rassionable neighborhood. It faces a park that has high fron relis about it, and which can only be enjoyed by the children of the rich, and all around are great, big houses, the homes of mill-ionaires. But not all the hurry of the world ever touches this quiet meeting-house. The jangle of the car bells is far from it, and always it seems as if the apirit of content rested there and ionged to give its blessing to whoever came seeking for that which is good. TO ME ON THAT EASTER MORNING There seemed no place like it. The churches were beautifully dressed with churches were beautifully dressed with lilies, the great organs were pealing forth hymns to the glory of God, yet here, where there was neither flower nor song, the Holy Ghost seemed to have descended and all was silence. On the window sill a tiny robin sat looking curiously at the quiet congregation, and every now and then he gave a melodious song as if to attract the attention of the people near him. And it came to me as if I heard the Spirit speaking in the song of the bird, and before me were those who, yesterday, I had seen in the flesh. First of all, a beautiful woman—bright of eye, quick of wit and lovely to look upon. But, alsaishe stood out from all other women as one for whom there could be no redemption—a sinner of the deepest dye. A sinner who had sinned because of love, and then, finding that she could not step back, had gone forward and forward, further and further, until her life represented sin and sin slone, and she died in it. And on her breast lay two white lilles, bought and brought there by a sister in sin. The preacher who stood beside her dead body told of the horrors of the future, told of frightful punishments and pictured death as a something to be dreaded, and not a good angel giving rest to those who are weary. lilies, the great organs were pealing forth AND THE ROBIN READING MY HEART

Sang out in sweet, but low tones, "And when He appeared, it was not to the saints when He appeared, it was not to the saints first of all, but to the woman out of whom He had cast seven devils, and whose scarlet robes were washed whiter than snow."

And then there came another picture. A man and a woman who had loved each other, who had believed that life and its joys were all to them when they were together; who had, selfishly enough, found the pleasures of this world sufficient, and who never thought to share their happiness with others, who never knew how to give of their plenty to the poor, who never thought of making easier the weight to those who carried great burdens. But they lived along from day to day simply enjoying, and never dreaming even of the selfishness of their life. And yesterday the man lay cold and still in death. And the woman knelt beside him and prayed that it might come to her. And, as if it were a dream, I saw her alone for many years, yet she had learned, through her grief, how rich might life be, if life meant sharing every joy with another, dividing the sorrow of another and taking the bigger half, and giving the helping hand to whoever might need it.

And the robin sang out just this, as if he knew her daily grief: "And God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes."

Then there came another picture.

And the robin sang clear and loud, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death." Then there was another picture.

A WOMAN ALONE.

Toiling, striving, day in and day out that death might be kept away from the door. Living a lonely life that meant all work and weariness. Unacquaiated with a friendly hand, never 'eeling a friendly smile, only knowing that with the rising of the sun work began, and with its setting that it stopped. When the needle was quiet, the woman was too weary even to pray, but God heard the wish and rest came. And there were no more bitter tears to wet the needle, and make it drag slowly, no more bitter tears to sait the poor food, only quietness and the beautiful stillness that comes with the angel of death. And the worker lay there, still and cold, and, even in death, there was no friendly hand to make the first handful of earth fall gently on the poor comm. A WOMAN ALONE.

around her wondered when the end would bo, and yet she bore her pain as only women children can. Sometimes it seemed almost too much. Sometimes she thought of those who were well and strong, who saw the sunshine in all its glory, not merely a piece of it through a glass window, and then she wished she were like them. Sometimes it did seem as if, for once, she would like to walk over the green fields that she had read about. Sometimes it did seem as if she would like to pluck the flowers that grew by the wayside, and laugh and dance as merrily is, if there were no such thing as pain. That was always there. She never saw the green fields, or the gay flowers, or walked a step. And yesterday the pain ceased. And DEATH, THE - CONQUERER, STILLED

Sleeping with a smile on her face, and with a bunch of spring blossoms in her hand, there came a vision like a dream, and in it she who had never laughed, was happy and well and strong, and she danced over the green fields and plucked the bright flowers, and all day long sang praises and thanks to Him who died that she might live.

And the note of the robin was sweeter and clearer than ever, and each word was distinct, and he sang, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

Don't you believe it? Sitting alone and quiet this Easter morn, doesn't the spirit speak to you through the bright sunshine, through the flowers and through the birds? My friend, if you don't, there is something wrong with you. You are looking out upon life with discontent in your heart, and with malice in your voice. No matter what your creed may be, the song of the robin must tell you the story of life and death. Here, where we think that God is best pleased by a pure silence and a thorough self-examination, followed by a hope to do better, there comes always to me the promise that is so sweet and so true: "And, behold! Christ is risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept."

LOVING THOUGHTS AT EASTER.

Sometimes the sleep is not good, but always there is Christ to waken you from this sleep that means indifference, that means unbelief, that means selfishness. The Spirit is speaking again and again, and trying to rouse you; are you deaf to the good words? Are you deaf to the good words? Are you deaf to the prayer that you may seek that which is good and let alone all that is wicked? I can't believe there is one human creature so bad that there is one human creature so bad that there is one human creature so bad that there isn't a tender spot in his heart for some one. Believe in something, my friend. Believe in somebody. Don't look at the Easter sunshine and have faith in nothing, and no love toward your fellow creature. There is so much to do, and the work is so near to you. Open your eyes wide to look for it and when it is found, work for it as if your life, as it does, depended upon it. If faith seems to have gone from you, at least say that great prayer, "Help their mine unbelief."

Start with a 'faith in somebody, a woman or a child, and your faith, at first like a mustard seed, will grow as a great palm tree, and afford rest and refreshment to those others who suffered like you. I do not think I am wrong in saying it makes no difference what your belief is. That you have faith, that you try to live up to it, is enough for me, and I believe it is enough for God. He will not ask you. "Were you a Catholic? Were you an Episcopalian! Were you a Presbyterian? or were were you a Universalist?" No. this sleep that means indifference, that means unbelief, that means selfishness. The Spirit is speaking again and was needed? I care not how loudly you have prayed. I care not for the gifts that were given with a flare of trumpets so that all the world might know, but I do care, and I ask you, as you hope for happiness here, what have you done for the least of thesa."

I fear that many a head will droop. Oh! my friends, we squabble over orthodoxy and heterodoxy; we quarrel over which is church music, and whether there shall be flowers of not. We listen to long sermons, and we give as did the Pharisee, and we are spoken of as being generous by all men, and yet there is something lacking. To the heterodox brother there is no charity shown; to the doubting sister there is no faith proven by good works, and to the world at large life is not made so beautiful that it forces the looker-on to hope for a hereafter. We are all wrong. We lay all our little plans of life and call them good. Then the day comes when we see our mistake, and we realize that without the Heaven of the Blessed Spirit all that we have done is worthless. You look at me and tell me that you feed the hungry, and yet before you give the bread you ask if they belong to your church.

The STORY OF EASTER SUNDAY.

THE STORY OF EASTER SUNDAY. There is no such thing as your church;

there is God's church, and if you and I live right, and do as near as possible what He would wish, then we become part of it. But in His church what the other man thinks, if he acts as a good Samaritan, is as orthodox as what you think, or what as orthodox as what you think, or what I proclaim.

This always seems to me the story of Baster Sunday, and, while the bells are ringing all around me, and I am sitting quietly in the meeting-house, once more, I hear the robin sing, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither crying, neither shall there be any more pain." And in one heart the spirit says: "Amen, and always amen." And over one woman there comes the joy and peace at Eastertide, and it seems to her as if the robin knew that she was BAB.

LAY SERMONS.

The very grandest man or woman in God's great universe is the man or woman who has fully learned how to mind his own business. This lesson does not consist in simply tetting other people's affairs alone; in guarding the doors of our lips so that we shall never prock evil of those that we shall never speak evil of those about us; it sometimes means infinitely more, even a deep and intimate concern in that which affects the well being and happiness of those with whom we come in contact in the various affairs of life. Let us look at some of the things which constitute our "own business."

First of all God commands us to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, and we are simply minding our own business when we do this. It is a part of our business to strive to make the world happier and better; to relieve as far as we may the suffering about us; to help the sorrowing and to give the cup of cold water in the name of the Master. "Mind your own business," has a broad, infinite meaning, and it indirectly conveys the command to us that we grasp all our opportunities for good and see that none of them slip by us unimproved. The mind, the heart, the soul it is our business part of our business to strive to make the veys the command to us that we grasp all our opportunities for good and see that none of them slip by us unimproved. The mind, the heart, the soul it is our business to improve, to make of ourselves grand men or grand women morally, intellectually and spiritually. The full unfolding of all our powers it is ours to labor for, and we do not mind our own business when we fall to strive for our own upbuilding in this direction. It is our own business when we fall to strive for our own upbuilding in this direction. It is our own business when we fall to strive for our own upbuilding in this direction. It is our own business to serve others whenever they need our help. In the great world of humanity no one liveth unto himself. We cannot live selfishly and mind our own business fully, for every life with which we come in touch requires somewhat of us—sometimes but a simple word of cheerful helpfulness; sometimes a kindly rebuke tenderly spoken; and again a caution against temptation, or a word of friendly interest to the heart that is lonely. Such words are sometimes a ladder on which the soul may climb out from the darkness into the light, from the sordidness of earth to the hope of heaven.

"Mind your own business," dear reader, and a part of your business is not to neglect your own spiritual welfare. The Master pleads with you today, and His language is. "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and heavy laden und I will give you rest." That is the first business for you to mind—to heed His voice and come unto Him. It is a simple thing. It is the surrender of your will to His will and permitting Him to lead you. That divine will holds no purpose toward us but good, our ultimate and eternal good, God comes to us with His hands full of blessings, and shall we refuse to accept it? O, let us mind our own business, and not neglect any portion of it. Let us reach out after the treasures of wisdom and knowledge that are hid in Christ and rejoice that the grace of God has enabled us to perform the business to make ready for the istered unto but to minister to others, so we in the spirit of Christ should go forth into the world laboring for Him and for the uplifting of the race. It is our business to take the whole world of humanity to our hearts as Christ did, and to recognize the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. Bearing that relationship in mind and realizing the momentous import of all it conveys, we shall be likely to be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit serving the Lord," until we become "perfect men and women in Christ Jesus." Then we shall learn the delight which may be ours in such service, the joy which may be found in doing our business and that of the Master.

MESSINA ORANGES

A Mess of Them at the Chamber of Commerce.

Orange-growers can now see the stuff against which they are fighting in the Eastern markets, on exhibition at the Chamber of Commerce. A dish of Messina oranges, bearing the label of F. S. Ciampa oranges, bearing the label of F. S. Ciampi & Sons, from Rodi, Italy, has been presented to the chamber. These orange are sold in the East at prices ranging from 90 cents to $1.25 a box, about the price of transportation from California to New York. They are of a grade inferior to the California oranges, but sufficiently good to be dangerous to the trade when the merely nominal price at which they are sold is taken into consideration.

The lemon-growers of North Ontario The lemon-growers of North Ontario have sent to the chamber a handsome display of lemons and oranges.

Some new features of the fruit exhibitare shown by Jacob Miller of Colegrove, who sends in a fine sample of the cherimoya, or custard apple, a branch bearing a load of bananas, and some specimens of the pepino, or melon-fruit from Guatemala.

The people of Riverside propose to celebrate the carnival time by a special affair to be known as orange day. It will take place Monday, April 22. Special arrangements have been made with the railroads and a large crowd of people will be taken from this city to Riverside. The town will be specially decorated in honor of the visitors and the packing-houses and orchards will be thrown open to them. Every visitor will be offered as many oranges as he may choose to eat or pocket. The general plan of orange day is modeled upon watermelon day, potato day and other celebrations of that sort held throughout the Western States. The citizens of Riverside have raised $1000 to carry on the entertainment in proper style. It is expected that large crowds of visitors will go down to Riverside at the conclusion of the fiests.

REPUTATION WIDE.

So Says Dr. Strahan, and His Word Cannot Be Doubted.

Staying for a few days in the city is Dr. J. S. H. Strahan, one of the few men who have made a name in the medical world which is international in its scope and a synonym fer all that is henorable in its samilted decency. Money—no matter how large the amount—could not induce Dr. Strahan to allow his name to be used to support the merits of any remedy if he had not conclusively proved its merits, and it is even doubtful if he would now allow his name to appear before the public but for the fact that in his practice he has seen more than one wonder emanate from California.

Dr. Strahan holds the position of consulting physician to the Northampton Royal Hospital, England, and is the author of four standard works on hereditary diseases. Indeed, he is the recognized authority on that class of insanity. In England—and, indeed, in Europe—he has a large practice, and when seen by a reporter he svowed that whilst it was scarcely what was considered "quite free aftern question," he was willing to give his opinion of Joy's Vegetable Saraparfills, because he had "ried it. "Do you wan to quote me?" he said. "If you will permit," was the reply, and in his own caligraphy Dr. Strahan has said a few things which are worth "putting in your pipe and amoking."

Somewhat over a year ago I had a severe case of what appeared to be incipient acrofula. There was, so far as one could judge, no reason for the appearance of the disease, and the microscopical examination of the epidermal scale left me in an unsatisfied state of mind as to whether it was wise to treat the ease to the ordinary way. From one of your medical men of the highest standing I had obtained a large number of proprietary remedics for the purpose of analysis. I happened to got in the package two bot-

Dr. Goodale Speaks of the Place of Sarsaparilla in the Pharmacopela,

There happens to be one of the most genuinely straightforward men, from a newspaper man's view, located at 1032 Market street, in this city, that one could readily find in a day's march, and you can find a whole lot of men if you go out marching for a day. His name is J. R. Goodsle; he is an M. D., and his is a name that you could "conjure with" in the East.

Dr. Goodsle has not been here long, but he has been here a sufficient length of time to get the respect of every one with whom he has come in contact, and principally because of his good manly character. It is safe to say that not only is his professional ability of the highest order, but he values his personal honor as a priceiess gift.

G. H. GOODALL, M. D.

"I may offend my brethren," was the reply.

"But you will tell the truth?"

"Well. of course, I recognize the fact that you can come here and interview me, and I could not object very well if you published what I said, but if you will give me a moment I can say for you on paper just what I think of the remedy, and then you can make what use you like of that."

What Dr. Goodale wrote follows, and when it is stated that for some fourteen years or so

School grow from nimest its very inciplency, a faint idea may be had as to his right as well as his ability to judgs. This is his modest statement: Dr. Goodale, as the cut plainly shows, is a man of exceptional intelligence. He has only been in practice here for a short time, but long enough to allow his ability and integrity to become matters of public knowledge. His good faith has made him many friends, and his professional ability is bringing him a practice that others possibly energ. But in no way will Dr. Goodale step out of the way of honorable conduct in order to benefit himself, and the years to come will probably errorn his life's devotion to his profession with Boaors, of which any member of any medical school might well be mylling. When men of this type say so much for "Joy's Vegstable Sarsasparifia," can there be any reasonable doubt as to its honest value? of This Statement by Dr. Bonesteel.

It happens that in the medical world there are a large number of clever men who, when entering the profession, from one cause or another feel themselves drawn to some special branch of their profession, and to that particular branch they give their particular attention, while of course not neglecting the everyday work which comes to every doctor. They are termed specialists, and amenges them there is no one in this city whose name is more widely known than is that of Dr. C. A. Bonesteel. All acquired diesases of the blood have had for years his close attention, and as an authority on general blood diesases and their remadles he had for years been considered one of the few men qualified to give an opinion which will not admit of being questioned.

DR. C. A. BONESTEEL. That is a sound opision and will carry with it great weight, for it is the opision of a man who is in a position to know, and whose daily practice brings him into contact with as great a variety of afficience arising from impure blood as perhaps any practitioner in this state sees. Doubters should call on the courteous doctor at his office, 1051 Market street, for he is not only an acknowledgedly clever man, but he has a reputation as a successful treater of chronic diseases.

Dr. Fearn has been in successful practice here ever since his graduation. He is held in high esteem by all the members of his profession who know him, and by none more highly than the Dean of the college that issued his diploms. An upright typecasional career is certainly one of the highest ways of helping humanity through an extended and it is on these lines that Dr. Fearn has always been known.
